EOC releases public engagement campaign urging South Carolinians to make education a priority

On November 15, the EOC unveiled a new public engagement campaign designed to provide information about the status of public schools in South Carolina and empower families, business and community leaders, and other stakeholders to take action on behalf of students and schools.

The website, www.expectmoresc.com, is described by EOC Chairman Neil Robinson as "a movement for kids and for the future of the state's economy."

Users of the website will find "playbooks" designed to give specific direction to families, community leaders, and businesses to help students and schools. There is also a section of the site that explains the School and District Report Cards.

Season 3 of Martin's Math Club is underway!

Martin's Math Club, Season 3 is underway along with basketball season! Head Coach Frank Martin, a former high school math educator, developed the project with the EOC to help young people learn that math is fun and relevant in their daily lives.

The contest provides the opportunity for teachers and students in grades Kindergarten through 8th grade to win two tickets to a University of SC Men's Basketball team home game. With assistance from South Carolina math educators, the EOC has published 27 standards-based lessons for K-8th grade that incorporate math and basketball.
