Subject: Save on Europe & Caribbean Cruises plus Tips for Cruising With Kids

Dear Mr. Kester,

I'll start today with some special offers we've negotiated with Princess, Norwegian, Oceania, Silversea, P&O and Cruise & Maritime Voyages. These offers feature shipboard credits, which can be used toward the purchase of just about anything not included in the upfront cost of your cruise, from spa treatments to boutique purchases to shore excursions.

Princess is offering our customers discounts of up to 86%. Also enjoy exclusive shipboard credits of up to $685 per cabin and a reduced deposit of just $100 per person on a variety of voyages. Past guests may see better rates on select sailings. See dates and prices.

Norwegian is offering Vacations To Go customers newly reduced rates, with huge discounts of up to 80% in Europe, the Caribbean and Mexico. See dates and prices.

Oceania is offering my readers fantastic new discounts in a variety of regions such as Europe, Caribbean and South America -- save up to 82%. As a bonus, get exclusive shipboard credits of up to $1,925 per cabin on many upcoming departures. Guests also receive free unlimited Internet and a choice of either free drinks or up to five free shore excursions on select sailings. See dates and prices.

Silversea is offering our customers a rare opportunity to save on an array of sailings worldwide, reducing its best available rates by up to 50% exclusively for Vacations To Go. Your Silversea fare includes onboard gratuities, complimentary beverages (including wine and spirits) and butler service. Book by March 31. See dates and prices.

P&O Cruises, the most popular cruise line in Britain, is offering our customers savings of up to 51% and shipboard credits of up to $750 per cabin on select sailings in the Caribbean and Europe. See dates and prices.

Cruise & Maritime Voyages has slashed fares by up to 77% for our customers. Plus get exclusive shipboard credits of up to $3,000 per cabin on certain departures. Book by April 20. See dates and prices.

As always, these offers are for new bookings only and subject to availability. Restrictions may apply.

Next, I'd like to talk about cruises for families with toddlers and young school-age children. In April, I'll devote a newsletter to cruising with kids ages 7-12, and in May I'll provide some tips on cruising with teens.

Those without young children or grandchildren may wish to skip straight to the deals.

One of the great things about having kids is being able to see the world through their eyes, fresh and new. The view is never more interesting than when you are at sea.

For a young child, a cruise ship is an enormous floating playground, with unimaginable delights on every deck. Between the ages of 2 and 6, most kids' requirements are few: room to explore, someone to play with, a snack when they want one and a nap when they need one.

With his father in the business, my son was fortunate to be able to take his first cruise at age 3. We sailed on Princess in the fall, and there were very few kids on board, so he was quite popular with all the grandparents we met (particularly since they didn't have to keep up with him). I know he enjoyed himself because he raced a mile a minute between naps.

His mother and I also were fortunate in that we had both sets of our parents along, so we could play tag team with our bundle of energy and then escape for a bit of solitude as the next shift took over. That's basically why cruise lines have devoted so much time and money building kids' facilities and hiring youth counselors -- to ensure plenty of playtime for each young guest and time for parents to relax and pursue their own interests.

On that first cruise, my son's favorite time of the day was dinner, when our waiter made animals out of paper squares, the Japanese art of origami, and presented each with dramatic flair. His favorite question, 100 times a day -- "Is that man coming to dinner?"

We learned on that cruise that it is important to make the cabin feel familiar and cozy. Kids have anxieties just like most adults when they travel, and it's hard for them to express those fears or even recognize them for what they are, so it's up to the parent to make things comfortable. If a child has a sleeping companion -- a doll, stuffed animal, special blanket or pillow -- be sure to bring it, along with anything else that is easy to pack and might make the stateroom feel more like home.

I believe my son was 4 or 5 when he first showed an interest in shore excursions (as long as they involved the beach), but his primary focus was still the ship's pool, and the shuffleboard court. Shuffleboard seems almost prehistoric compared to all the latest amenities, but it's great for kids of this age.

We sailed one year to the Caribbean on Holland America, and at the end of that cruise, I asked my son what he had enjoyed the most. Was it the school of dolphins we'd watched swim alongside the ship, was it playing in the beautiful water of Magens Bay in St. Thomas, was it the onboard pool, where he spent much of his time during days at sea?

No, he told me his favorite thing was coming back to the cabin after dinner to see where our cabin stewardess had hidden his stuffed frog, Kippee.

One night it peeked out from under his pillow, another night it looked down from a lamp shade. One evening, Kippee had slipped into a bathrobe. Each night the hiding place was more clever than the night before, and my son tore through the cabin in near hysterics until he found his sleeping companion and squealed with delight. The thoughtful acts of our cabin stewardess, so far from her own family, meant so much to mine.

It's funny what is important to a child at that age, and what they remember. But to this day, my fondest memory of that cruise is a green frog, too.
