"The governor has been clear about this critical quality of life issue since the beginning of the administration," Adams said in an email. "South Carolina will not be a dumping ground for weapons-grade plutonium and nuclear waste.

"The governor supports following through on the agreement between South Carolina and DOE. We are not seeing any movement toward processing or moving the weapons grade plutonium."

This is, obviously, a good thing for South Carolina, but only if the feds follow through on the report and actually move the waste from Savannah River," Adams said in an email. "The DOE does not have a great track record of keeping its promises to the people of South Carolina, which is why we will continue to push them in every way we can to make sure our state is not a dumping ground for others' nuclear waste."
