Braden Bunch

Standing beside Gov. Nikki Haley, along with a large entourage including her mother, teacher, school classmates, local legislators and her little brother — who inserted himself into several photo opportunities as only little brothers can — the 8-year-old third-grader watched Tuesday as the legislation she proposed making the Columbian Mammoth the official state fossil was ceremoniously signed into law.

Note: "You want to improve your state, you want to make a difference, and Olivia is a great 8-year-old example of how to make life better in the state of South Carolina," Haley said of the New Zion girl who pushed for her bill, despite the proposal running into substantial roadblocks.

Olivia McConnell, a third grade student from Carolina Academy in Lake City, joined Governor Nikki Haley Tuesday for the ceremonial signing of a bill to name the Columbian Mammoth as the official state fossil of South Carolina.

Note: "This is a great reminder that young people in South Carolina really can make a difference.

Regardless of your age, if you have the confidence to use the power of your voice to pursue something that you're passionate about, then you can find a way to be successful," said Gov. Haley. "Children like Olivia are the future leaders of our state and she has set a great example for all of us to follow."

<http://www.reuters.com/article/2014/05/27/us-usa-afghanistan-obama-idUSKBN0E71WQ20140527>

Steve Holland

U.S. President Barack Obama will announce on Tuesday that he wants to leave 9,800 American troops in Afghanistan after this year and mostly end the U.S. presence by the end of 2016, senior administration officials said. The decision, to be announced by Obama in a White House Rose Garden event at 2:45 p.m. EDT, means that the president will leave office in early 2017 with no measurable troop strength in Afghanistan.
