

‘The Secret Wireless War’, the story of MI6 (Section VIII) based at Whaddon Hall, five miles west of Bletchley Park, from where ULTRA messages for our military commanders were disseminated. Agent’s wireless sets were made there and a host of other roles connected with our Secret Intelligence Services (SIS) communications in World War II.

Dear Nikki Haley,

I am writing to express my complete admiration for your recent appearances on our television screens. The first was following that despicable attack on worshipers in Church, and the second when you spoke last night about the Confederate flag.

Now 89, I have listened to many speakers - including Nehru and Jinna in 1946 whilst I was working in Calcutta for MI6 - to Churchill and almost every politician in the British Parliament since! However, never have I been so spellbound by the spoken word and their presentation.

I am fortunate in having a Sikh daughter-in-law named Aneeta (née Jandu) and two lovely grandsons who have their mother's charm and a determination to 'get on'! Your story is a almost a textbook on what hard work can achieve.

You must be inundated with messages of goodwill but please allow me to add my own congratulations and good wishes for your future.

Very Sincerely,

Geoffrey Pidgeon
