---

I still have insomnia but not as bad as it used to be, I have embraced it as my creative and contemplative time. Last night it came to me that I want to raise money for a mobile mammography unit that would go to rural counties in India. I know that tomorrow is the first day of breast cancer awareness month, maybe that is why this came to me. Honestly I feel like that is how god helps me heal my own wounds. He gives me ideas and direction to help others who don't have the awesome support system of family and friends like you.

We could do this the way the kids in Lexington raised money for a fire engine for NYC after 911. It is obviously in keeping with the directive in our state and in India to focus on the poor who don't have access to care. It encompasses my personal breast cancer story and I now have the conviction to know anything is possible. This is a long term goal but I wanted to sow the seed as it came to me on as tomorrow pivotal day for the breast cancer community.

Have a great day in SC, thanks for all you do!
fondly,

Bhavna
