New Online Certificate Courses Open for Enrollment!

We are excited to announce that a brand-new online course is now open for enrollment! During the five-week Health and Wellness in an Aging Society, expert USC faculty members will explore common health issues faced by seniors, public health in an aging world, and the strategies for caring for older adults with various health challenges. Enroll now.

We are also pleased to announce the return of our popular Fundamentals of Gerontology course! Enroll now in one or both courses, offered exclusively to ASA members in partnership with USC Leonard Davis School of Gerontology. Courses begin October 19, and enrollees receive a certificate of completion after successfully completing each course. Three course options are also available for 2016.

WEBINAR TODAY: Caring for Someone with Alzheimer's

Alzheimer's disease and other dementias present unique caregiving challenges. This web seminar offers approaches for how to care for people with Alzheimer's or other dementias. Rather than focus on Alzheimer's symptoms, diagnosis, treatments and possible cures, this session emphasizes the dignity of individuals with dementia, and highlights care strategies that can help them live a more fulfilling life. This unique approach to person-centered care helps caregivers to cope with the difficulties of caregiving, and teaches how to successfully manage behaviors and positively engage clients or loved ones. Part of the Family Caregiver Support Series sponsored by Home Instead Senior Care, this webinar is free and open to everyone and includes complimentary CEUs.

A Matter of Faith and Trust: Why African Americans Don't Use Hospice (VIDEO)

Even as end-of-life planning gains favor with more Americans, African-Americans, research shows, remain very skeptical of options like hospice and advance directives. The result can mean more aggressive, painful care at the end of life that prolongs suffering.
