Subject: Tropical Update

Good Afternoon,

Sending out an early update before the long weekend of football game(s), sloth, and dove hunting.

Hurricane Cristobal continues northeast into the central North Atlantic, alone and unafraid. A series of weak easterly waves trundle across the Atlantic tropics. The wave just east of the Lesser Antilles, formerly named 97L, had some prospects for intensification; however, this feature will encounter an increasingly hostile environment as it slinks into the Caribbean no harm, no foul. The other non-descript waves have no potential for development with the exception of the wave directly over the west coast of Africa. Models are tad more interested with developing this feature with various non-threatening fish storm solutions at this time. Out over 4000 miles and 180+ hours, the Prudent quietly abides on this one. Elsewhere, tropical storm formation is not expected this weekend

Green deck for a long weekend.
