Birds are all around us! Have you ever heard a birdsong and wished you knew what kind of bird it was? Ranger Laura is here to tell you about BirdNet -- an app that can do just that! Check it out and let us know if you've used it before!

Edith Skinner Gotta get this!

A few years ago I kept hearing this bird song, and had no idea what it was. I tried humming it to a fellow park walker.

She couldn't identify it.

I was finally able to record it. She still couldn't identify it, but she forwarded it to a friend who forwarded it to another friend, who was able to identify it. Finally!

This will be a fun app. Although it was fun trying to solve that bird song mystery.

Lana Lane Thomas We will check this app out! Woke up at Poinsett the other day and heard a bird I didn't recognize. Couldn't find it up amidst all the foliage either. Will try this next time!

Ashley Stone Thank you for sharing this. Does anyone know if a red shouldered hawk could have a white belly? I have a bird that lives in my wood's. It has tried to attack me twice in a little over a year when I am out gardening. It takes the same path daily. I did a video the other day and used another phone to try out this app. It is saying it is a red shouldered hawk. On this day there were hawks in the area but I think the sound I had was coming from the bird I can't identify. Last year my chicken saved me from it. It is a beautiful bird and I would love to know what it is. I know this picture is horrible but, if anyone could identify I would be so thankful
