ANALYSIS

5 Takeaways From DC Circ.'s Net Neutrality Ruling

The D.C. Circuit's net neutrality decision Tuesday caught many practitioners off guard with its sweeping endorsement of the Federal Communications Commission's altered internet rules and has ushered in a new era of FCC regulatory authority. Here, Law360 highlights five things you should know about the decision.

EPA Enviro Justice Goals May Affect Future Regs, Settlements

The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency's new technical guidance on how its analysts should incorporate environmental justice principles into their work shows how serious the agency is about applying those principles to its rulemaking and enforcement efforts and could mean new requirements for businesses covered by future EPA rules or settlements, experts said.

New Pipeline Safety Bill Turns Up Heat On PHMSA

The U.S. Pipeline and Hazardous Materials Safety Administration reauthorization bill that President Barack Obama is expected to sign into law soon heaps more significant safety mandates on the agency's crowded regulatory plate, which could further slow its already sluggish and much-maligned rulemaking pace, experts say.

BANKING & SECURITIES

IEX Wins Nod For Stock Exchange With 'Speed Bump'

The U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission gave the go-ahead to IEX Group's plan for a new stock exchange that comes with a built-in "speed bump" to check high-speed traders, despite protests from those traders that the move would interrupt trades marketwide.

Hong Kong Exchange To Overhaul IPO Listing Process

Hong Kong's stock exchange and securities watchdog proposed the creation of two new oversight committees Friday, saying that the new committees would make handling listing policy and initial public offering matters easier and foster new cooperation between the two bodies.

China Securities Watchdog Tightens Backdoor Listing Rules

China's securities regulator said Friday that it will take steps to curb speculation and more strictly police "backdoor listings" in a move that comes as the country looks to shore up its capital markets and prevent a repeat of the market volatility that rocked investors' confidence last year.

Tilton Says SEC Can't Reopen In-House Suit Before Mandate

Private equity magnate Lynn Tilton bashed the U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission's request to immediately revive its $200 million in-house case against her, telling the Second Circuit that she still has time to seek review of the appellate court's decision allowing the administrative case to proceed.

7th Circ. Won't Revisit FERC Project-Rights Ruling

The Seventh Circuit on Thursday declined to reconsider its earlier ruling that backed a Federal Energy Regulatory Commission decision allowing a regional grid operator to honor non-federal rights of first refusal for regional electricity projects.

Ex-EPA Official Allowed To Testify In 'War On Coal' Suit

A West Virginia federal judge on Friday shot down the Environmental Protection Agency's request to keep a Bracewell LLP attorney who had worked for the EPA from testifying in Murray Energy's lawsuit accusing the agency of failing to study how its air quality regulations impact jobs, saying the EPA couldn't prove that he had a conflict of interest in the case.

HEALTH & LIFE SCIENCES

Sec. Burwell Wants To End Medicare Patient Class Action

Health Secretary Sylvia Mathews Burwell on Thursday told a Connecticut federal court to dismiss a putative class action brought by Medicare patients who claim they were denied their constitutional right to due process by being placed under observation while hospitals considered whether to admit them.

Hospice Urges Supreme Court To Take Medicare Money Case

An Arkansas hospice has asked the U.S. Supreme Court to review an Eighth Circuit ruling requiring the facility to continue caring for Medicare patients after the government has reached its annual reimbursement limit, arguing the tactic constitutes an illegal taking of private property in violation of the Fifth Amendment.

TRANSPORTATION & INFRASTRUCTURE

Ocean Carriers Urged To Help With Container Weight Rule

The head of the Federal Maritime Commission on Thursday urged ocean carriers to take straightforward and simple approaches to ease the confusion over implementing a new international mandate requiring all containers shipped via ocean carriers to have their weight verified.

The Texas Supreme Court sided with a local television news station in a defamation suit on Friday, saying that a doctor who sued it over a media report about her didn't meet a burden for it to move forward under the Texas Citizens Participation Act.

EXPERT ANALYSIS

The Empire Strikes: Thoughts On Gov't Puerto Rico Decisions

With two recent U.S. Supreme Court decisions and a bill passed in the House with an overwhelming bipartisan majority, the federal government has struck a severe blow to the illusion of self-government by the people of Puerto Rico, says Carlos Ivan Gorrin Peralta, a professor of constitutional law at the Inter-American University of Puerto Rico.

A Glimmer Of Hope In DCAA's FY 2015 Report To Congress

Fiscal year 2015 was a productive year for the Defense Contract Audit Agency. Compared to FY 2014 figures, the statistics show that the DCAA is making progress in clearing its audit backlog, but it is difficult to see how the DCAA can sustain this momentum, especially in connection with the closure of incurred cost audits — its primary mandate, say Dave Nadler and David Yang of Blank Rome LLP.

White House Privacy Rules For Health Initiative Lack Specifics

The guidance offered in the data security framework for the White House's Precision Medicine Initiative remains too broad to offer much practical utility for different health care organizations with different needs. Although “wobble room” is important in order for participants to adapt, they are likely to be frustrated by the lack of concrete rules, say attorneys at King & Spalding LLP.

In Congress: Brexit, Puerto Rico, 2nd Amendment Showdown

Appropriations continue to dominate floor activity in both the House and Senate this week, but questions over the future of the fiscal year 2017 appropriations process will shift to the Senate, where Democrats have forced votes on firearms issues following the Orlando nightclub massacre, say Richard Hertling and Kaitlyn McClure of Covington & Burling LLP.

LEGAL INDUSTRY

Associate Pay Hikes Could Spur NYC Exodus

Law firms spread the love when raising associates' starting salaries to $180,000 over the last two weeks by not limiting the bumps to attorneys in New York City, but rather including remote hubs like Cheyenne, Wyoming. The move leads some experts to conclude that top talent will soon eschew the high-rent metropolis that was once a bastion of fat paychecks.

5 More Firms Wrap Up Week With Associate Raises

Five more firms ensured their associates enjoy the weekend by announcing that they will meet the Cravath salary scale for certain associates in their U.S. offices, as the legal sector continues adjusting to the new salary benchmark set by Cravath Swaine & Moore LLP.
