---

Hi there,

I recently discovered the valuable emergency preparedness work you're involved with, and I wanted to share a new guide with you created by my team to help students with this extremely important subject. It's called Emergency Preparedness in School: How to Prevent, Prepare, Respond and Recover in the Face of Emergencies and Disasters; you can see it here:

<https://www.accreditedschoolsonline.org/resources/emergency-preparedness-in-school/>

The guide identifies the various risks across the country and includes a helpful natural disaster risk map. It then focuses on what to do in school in various emergency situations, such as experiencing an earthquake, fire, hurricane, tornado, or if under threat from an active shooter. There's also information about putting together an emergency kit, and other useful resources.

Would you be willing to include the link to this guide with the other great resources on your page (<http://ltgov.sc.gov/emergency-preparedness/pages/default.aspx>)? It should make a really strong addition and I'd love to reach your community (and particularly the students and teachers within it) with this crucial information and help them prepare for crisis situations.

Thanks,

Cameron Banks
