Dear ADSSP, ADI, and SI grantees and collaborative partners,

The National Alzheimer's and Dementia Resource Center is pleased to provide you with a new resource, Care Transitions Resources. The document is attached for your reference.

About the document:

The movement of patients from one health care provider or setting to another as their health care condition and needs change is termed a care transition. Research has shown that during care transitions, patients, especially those at higher risk for rehospitalization such as people with dementia, can be subject to inadequate communication between providers in various settings, poor continuity of care, and limited access to services which can contribute to poor outcomes and less than optimal care. A growing body of research on care transitions and work in the field aims to improve these care transitions. The Care Transitions Resources document includes peer-reviewed literature and other resources related to various aspects of care transitions for people with dementia.

Thank you,
National Alzheimer's and Dementia Resource Center
