

We unite our minds and our strengths for the purpose of manifesting and maintaining a communally beneficial network.

This is a reminder that we must erase our ego in order to progress, and replace it with a symbol of community.

It's a reminder that relationships are more valuable than money;
Money has no value except for the faith that WE instill in it.
We retract our faith from any person or institution guided by greed, rendering their money worthless.

This is a reminder that we are transcending the boundaries established by our forefathers, improvising on their machine while shedding the flaws.

It's a reminder that no single person should be held above any other, and no figurehead, living or dead, has dominion over us.

This is a reminder that WE THE PEOPLE are the authority;
the government is OUR business entity.
The president is no more a leader
than he is an employee.

#HONEYCOMBWEB

Bombarding the senses with repeated images is the earliest formula for mind control. How do you think you would be programmed if you saw the same face every time you bought or sold "your" merchandise?

The information we collect on a daily basis propagates a mentality of inequality and dependency; we are led to believe that certain types of people are more valuable than others, and that we need the "more valuable people" to survive. This is a mentality that cripples our economy as well as our relationships with each other.

Financial and social inequality are a result of a nationwide self-esteem discrepancy.

By representing one man, one gender and one race, ~~our money speaks volumes~~ by subtly debasing the self-esteem of Americans that do not resemble the image it represents.

People allow themselves to be exploited because they believe they are inferior.

This inferiority complex is a psychological side-effect of repeatedly associating money with a specific person's identity.

If you write a person's name on money...

or on locations...

...you suggest that those things are his property...

and you must ask for his permission to enjoy those things.

The inevitable reformation and "de-facing" of American currency is the path to socio-economic equality.

Without names and faces, our currency represents everyone... and belongs to everyone.

Our country and our capital do not belong to one man or one mentality, nor is it quantifiable in a two-party system. America belongs to all of us. We do not require the permission or approval of individuals. Any decision that effects the entire country is made by the entire country.

"TRUE American" Dollar...

What exactly is being said here... "All men are created equal?"
