Don't worry if you don't have an "R"

Many subscribers have called the Market Bulletin staff, concerned that their latest Bulletin didn't have an "R," but there is no need to worry. We have received almost 40,000 renewals, and it simply takes a few months to process them all. Keep an eye out for the "R"; if your label doesn't have it by June, then you should resubmit your renewal. No subscriptions will be cancelled before July.

Also, please be sure to send us your mailing label. Simply sending us your address will not work! We must have your ID number to process the renewal. Thank you!

Bobwhite Brigade Conservation Camp

If you are a rising high school sophomore, junior or senior and enjoy studying about wildlife in general, and quail in particular, then the upcoming Bobwhite Brigade conservation camp might be just the deal for you!

The Bobwhite Brigade is a five-day conservation camp for high school students designed to make them bobwhite quail experts. The camp will be held June 19-23 at the Webb Wildlife Center in Hampton County. It is sponsored by Quail Unlimited, S.C. Department of Natural Resources, Georgia Department of Natural Resources, Clemson Extension Service and University of Georgia Extension Service. Bobwhite Brigade participants will study quail anatomy, biology, habitat management, population dynamics, conservation, hunting techniques and more. They will also learn about wildlife ecology, photography, entomology, botany, firearm safety and leadership skills.

Participants must submit applications and be chosen to attend the camp, and will receive intensive training in quail biology and management by leading Southeastern wildlife biologists. Each member of the Bobwhite Brigade will be expected to present educational programs on quail management in his or her county of residency. Each student must be selected to participate, and the cost of attending is $200, which can be paid for by local sponsors. For more information about the camp, call (803) 734-3939 or e-mail Billy Dukes at billyd@scdnr.state.sc.us.

Ag and Natural Resources Unite to Solve Issues

The Governor's Summit on Agriculture and Natural Resources convened early on March 13 at the State Museum in Columbia. The Summit was developed to provide a forum for representatives from agricultural organizations, public officials and farmers to develop solutions to some critical issues facing South Carolina's second largest industry—food, fiber, and forestry.

The meeting, which was facilitated by Freddy Vang of the S.C. Department of Natural Resources, opened with introductions to the issues by Commissioner Les Tindal—State Supported Ag Infrastructure; Dr. John Kelly, Vice President of Clemson University's Public Service and Agriculture - Research, Education and Marketing Programs; David Winkles of the SC Farm Bureau - Sustainable Economic Development; Freddy Vang of the SC Department of Natural Resources-Water Use and Environmental Issues; and Bernie Wright, State Director of the SC-USDA-Rural Development Service-Urban Encroachment and Land Use Planning.

Governor Jim Hodges then charged the group to reach a consensus on the issues presented. He said that the solutions developed at the Summit would be presented to him in a written report. Participants were then divided into groups to work on possible solutions to the issues and established the following as some of their top priorities:

- increase public awareness/education of S.C. agriculture
- secure state funds to match federal and farmer funds for irrigation and other programs
- encourage agribusiness expansion and development and create an understanding that agribusiness is just as important to South Carolina's economy as any other business
- support agricultural dependent rural areas

"Profitability" rose to the top as the underlying focus, and the results of the sessions became the objectives in how to make agriculture and natural resources more profitable. Many who attended the Governor's Ag Summit left with the hope that the solutions to the issues will, indeed, become realities in the near future.

The Taste of South Carolina Quality

South Carolina products grace our tables on a daily basis (I hope). But when you're in a restaurant, how often do you stop to wonder whether the chef is using locally grown products?

If the chef is concerned with quality and freshness, then he or she is using S.C. products when they're in season. And, hoping to see how creative local chefs could be with our products, the S.C. Department of Agriculture began presenting the Serving South Carolina Quality Award in 1994 at the annual Taste of the Tidelands Gala in Litchfield. The award goes to the chef who uses specified S.C. products in the best-tasting, enticing and most unique dish. As the years have passed, the award has become more and more prestigious, and each year more than a dozen chefs compete for it.

This year, David Bardari, chef and owner of The Community House Restaurant on Pawleys Island, won the Serving South Carolina Quality Award for the third time in his career. Each chef was to choose at least one of seven S.C. products to include in their meal, but David used them all. His main dish was an herb-roasted breast of turkey and a sausage Shiitake stuff fed turkey leg, served with no-lumps giblet gravy, sweet potato soufflé topped with toasted peanut sauce, sautéed spinach and stewed cabbage. It was a wonderful, nutritious meal full of S.C. products.

David's talents derived from a long line of cooks. His grandparents, both of whom were born in Italy, took their cooking very seriously—seriously enough to have a "prep" kitchen separate from their main kitchen.

Judging from all his awards, I would say David has been a very successful chef. After graduating from the Culinary Institute of America, David was a pastry chef, among many other things, at a Connecticut restaurant where he trained with the former chef of The 21 Club and La Felida. Later, he helped design and open a new Northern Italian restaurant called Bacci's in Southbury Conn., where he was the general manager. In 1992 he was approached by investors who wanted to buy a restaurant in Pawleys Island. So he packed everything and moved to South Carolina to open The Community House. After a two-year break from The Community House, he returned to become the sole owner.

As head chef and owner, David renovated the restaurant, giving it a Mediterranean theme. And you can bet that whenever they're in season, David is serving fresh South Carolina products. David is very particular about his ingredients—especially produce. He told me that he always looks for locally grown fruits and vegetables. Obviously, he wants only the best for his customers.

The annual Taste of the Tidelands Gala encourages culinary creativity, promotes local restaurants and tourism, raises money for local charities and provides scholarships for culinary students. The event also brings South Carolina products into the limelight, giving credit to those who work so hard to produce our food. I think all our chefs should make every effort to buy S.C. products for their restaurants—then they could certainly guarantee freshness!
