Sarla Performance Fibers establishing operations in Colleton County

$13.8 million investment expected to create 100 new jobs

American industrialist Henry Ford once defined the spirit of cooperation this way, "coming together is a beginning; keeping together is progress; working together is success." This saying proved true this week as the state and the City of North Charleston reached a settlement on the dual rail issue, creating a win-win for all involved. This agreement positions our state at the top of the game for competing globally for post-Panamax business and we are excited about the new economic doors that will be opened to the Palmetto State.

Like water poured on a rock, when the commerce comes, it has to have somewhere to go. This agreement reached with the City of North Charleston will result in a higher volume and more efficient distribution channel for companies in South Carolina and all over the world. Importantly, we found ways to accomplish this while minimizing impact to residents. The state and the City of North Charleston worked together to find a solution to the dual rail issue, thus putting South Carolina on the right track for potential growth and success.

Sarla Performance Fibers, a producer of yarn and threads, is locating its new operations in Colleton County. The $13.8 million investment is expected to generate 100 new jobs. The new plant is expected to begin operations by May 2013.

"South Carolina has a long tradition as a maker of textiles, and announcements like this one from Sarla Performance Fibers build on that history. The company's decision also gives South Carolina's manufacturing renaissance a boost. More and more manufacturers are discovering that the Palmetto State is just right for their companies," said Secretary of Commerce Bobby Hitt.

South Carolina, Gov. Nikki Haley receive accolades for foreign investment recruitment from *fDi

Governor ranked among top 10 in nation; state ranked sixth for foreign direct investment

South Carolina and Gov. Nikki Haley received high ratings for attracting foreign direct investment (FDI) in fDi magazine's inaugural Governor's Awards. The magazine's judging panel placed Governor Haley among the top ten Governors in the nation; placing her in the third spot in the overall rankings, and fifth for best strategy. South Carolina was ranked sixth among states for its recruitment of FDI.

"South Carolina continues to be a leader in garnering investment from foreign-affiliated firms. Gov. Haley has been our state's number one advocate for our state to businesses around the globe, especially on our international trade missions," said Secretary of Commerce Bobby Hitt.
