I had to share this with someone.

Typed several responses and then deleted them all.

Is this guy just venting because he can't win state business or more unibomber?

Sometimes in life a person says enough is enough and will risk everything to make things right. That type of person is no different than the man on the street, except that he has reached a point where the message is stronger than the individual.

Once heard, the message resonates with the public only if it makes sense. The masses are the best judge between right and wrong. They don't have allegiances to a party, ideology, or individual. They are the masses, they will be heard and they will decide the fate of those that represent them.

You both have the ability to make things right. Don't hide behind a curtain and let others make the law. Take the road less traveled and make the necessary changes yourself.
