Governor Nikki Haley News:

Associated Press: Supreme Court: Haley can't appoint DOT secretary

http://m.apnews.com/ap/db_268748/contentdetail.htm?contentguid=GG1qowzS

Seanna Adcox

A state Supreme Court ruling temporarily put the Department of Transportation's leadership in limbo. The justices on Wednesday threw out a clause in the state budget allowing Gov. Nikki Haley to continue appointing the DOT secretary. The court ruled the clause was unrelated to the budget and therefore unconstitutional. Under the 2007 law that put the DOT in the governor's Cabinet, Haley's ability to appoint the secretary should have expired last July. Legislators intended to address that as part of highway-funding legislation.

The S.C. Supreme Court ruled unlawful Wednesday a one-year budget amendment extending the governor's ability to appoint the head of the S.C. Department of Transportation. The budget amendment, called a proviso, was stricken down by the court, stripping Gov. Nikki Haley of her ability to appoint the head of the Transportation Department, now Christy Hall. When it became clear a road-repair bill would not pass last year, lawmakers used the budget deal to extend Haley's ability to appoint the Transportation secretary through the 2015-16 fiscal year, which ends June 30.

Gavin Jackson

The S.C. Department of Transportation Commission reappointed agency Secretary Christy Hall in an emergency meeting Wednesday after a state Supreme Court ruling struck a budget proviso from last year as unconstitutional. It allowed the governor to appoint the secretary. The appointment is effective July 1, 2015 and includes ratification of all actions she's taken since then, to the present. The vote was 8-0.

The South Carolina Supreme Court has once again sided with Greenville businessman Edward Sloan in his watchdog battle with state government, this time striking a budget proviso as unconstitutional that allowed the governor to continue appointing the leader of the state Department of Transportation. The 4-1 ruling issued Wednesday came after Sloan and his South Carolina Public Interest Foundation sued leaders of the Legislature and the state, alleging that the proviso violated a requirement in the state's constitution that legislation adhere to a single subject, in this case the budget.

Chicago Tribune: Chicago-based Opternative avoids online eye exam ban in South Carolina
<http://www.chicagotribune.com/bluesky/originals/ct-opternative-south-carolina-veto-bsi-20160518-story.html>

Meg Graham

Opternative, the Chicago-based online eye exam startup, notched a victory in South Carolina this week as it continues a contentious state-by-state battle to keep its services from being banned. Opternative launched $40 online refractive eye tests last year, offering prescriptions for glasses or contacts to patients ages 18 to 45 without a visit to the eye doctor. The exams are now available in 34 states, including Illinois, where it has partnered with ophthalmologists to write prescriptions. A South Carolina bill would have required prescriptions for glasses or contacts to be based on an in-person exam. It was vetoed Monday by Gov. Nikki Haley.

Newsmax: Franklin Graham on SC Abortion Bill: 'A Step in the Right Direction'
<http://www.newsmax.com/Politics/Franklin-Graham-Wendy-Nanney-Nikki-Haley-SC/2016/05/18/id/729402/>

Franklin Graham called a South Carolina bill that restricts abortion after 19 weeks is "a step in the right direction that will save a lot of lives," in a Facebook post, claiming that the bill is "good news." Graham, son of evangelist Billy Graham, noted that the bill was signed by the South Carolina Legislature and is now headed to South Carolina's Republican Gov. Nikki Haley. The Myrtle Beach Online report said Haley confirmed in March that she was in favor of the bill. "I can't imagine any scenario in which I wouldn't sign it," Haley said at the time.

A bill that would reduce fees and wait times for documents under South Carolina's public records law may be closer to passing this year. On Wednesday, a House subcommittee did some swapping to work around a senator who's been blocking the proposal. The panel took a bill passed by the Senate making police dashboard camera video available under a public records request and replaced it with the overhaul bill.

A bill that would allow South Carolina to borrow more than $2 billion for bridge repairs and interstate expansion is heading to the House floor. The House Ways and Means Committee unanimously approved a bill Wednesday that combines new money passed by the Senate with changes in how the board that runs the state Department of Transportation is appointed. Committee Chairman Brian White says he hopes the House will take up the bill early next week. He says there aren't too many changes, so he hopes senators can get something done before the legislative session ends June 2.

A bill introduced in the Rhode Island General Assembly would shield public access to records involving scholarly research at public universities. The Providence Journal reports (<http://bit.ly/27xFvxs>) the bill is scheduled for a committee hearing Wednesday. Rep. Carol Hagan McEntee, who introduced the bill, says the intent is to protect researchers from being targeted with requests from climate change deniers.

LGBT Laws:

SC State Wire

Both South Carolina Gov. Nikki Haley and state Attorney General Alan Wilson oppose a federal directive telling public schools to allow students to use bathrooms aligning with their gender identity. Both said in statements to The Greenville News (<http://grnol.co/1R8hWz8>) that it's an issue for state and local governments. Wilson says he is talking to other attorneys general to discuss if anything can be done to fight the directive. Federal education funding is at stake if schools don't follow the guidance.

Will Doran

Chris Sgro, a Democratic member of the N.C. House of Representative and an LGBT rights activist, has repeatedly called on Republican leaders to repeal HB2. The law has already cost North Carolina's economy $500 million, Sgro said, as businesses, performers and conferences cancel in a show of support for gay and transgender people.

Under fire from the governor and many Republican legislators, the Mississippi Department of Education now says it won't follow new federal guidance on use of bathrooms and locker rooms by transgender students. State Superintendent Carey Wright made the announcement Wednesday morning in a brief statement, saying the department would "follow the lead of state leadership" and take no action until the state Board of Education could discuss the situation. The move comes as Republicans in a number of other states have opposed the guidance, with some seeking to join legal challenges.

Note: Elsewhere, Georgia's governor on Tuesday ordered his state's superintendent to provide guidance to create a uniform response across the state to "this federal overreach." South Carolina's governor and state attorney general said they oppose the guidance, but the state superintendent has said she's monitoring it.

Wilson-Pascoe Dispute:

Associated Press: SC Supreme Court to hear Pascoe-Wilson case in June

SC State Wire

The South Carolina Supreme Court has agreed to decide whether a prosecutor other than the state attorney general can open a state grand jury investigation. The court issued an order Wednesday saying arguments in the case will be June 16. Prosecutor David Pascoe sued Attorney General Alan Wilson, saying he was allowed to open the state grand jury probe into legislative corruption because Wilson turned the case over to him because of a possible conflict. He says Wilson turned his investigation into a political game.

The S.C. Supreme Court on Wednesday set oral arguments in the high-profile dispute between Attorney General Alan Wilson and his special prosecutor David Pascoe for mid-June. Setting a date for a hearing assures that whatever decision the Supreme Court eventually reaches, the arguments from each side will get a thorough airing in a public courtroom. At issue before the high court will be whether Wilson has the authority to remove Pascoe from an investigation into alleged public corruption in the General Assembly, an investigation that possibly involves political allies of Wilson's.

After seven weeks of silence, the S.C. Supreme Court agreed Wednesday to weigh in on whether a special prosecutor can open a state grand jury investigation into Statehouse corruption without the blessing of the attorney general who appointed him. The high court scheduled oral arguments for June 16 at 9:30 a.m. in the running legal battle between Attorney General Alan Wilson and 1st Circuit Solicitor David Pascoe. That effectively stalls the probe into possible lawmaker misdeeds for at least another month. It remains unclear when the Supreme Court will actually rule on the matter.

The State: Ethics complaint against SC treasurer continues

Jamie Self

State ethics officials Wednesday said they have more questions they want answered before they decide whether to dismiss an ethics case against S.C. Treasurer Curtis Loftis. The complaint accuses the Republican of breaking state ethics laws by using his office to help a long-time friend and business associate get a job representing the state in a lawsuit. Gregory Harris, an attorney for Loftis, asked the S.C. State Ethics Commission to dismiss the complaint, arguing Loftis did not break state ethics laws when Michael Montgomery, a former Richland County councilman and Richland 2 school board member, was hired as additional counsel for the state in a multimillion-dollar lawsuit against the Bank of New York Mellon.

Post and Courier: Clyburn and Sanford efforts to force full debates on tough issues fall short

<http://www.postandcourier.com/article/20160518/PC1603/160519423>

Despite the efforts of two South Carolina congressmen, the U.S. House will not be debating questions of whether the Confederate flag should fly at The Citadel or military recruits should have to buy U.S.-made sneakers. House Republican leaders opted late Tuesday night not to allow for an up or down vote on either amendment offered by Jim Clyburn and Mark Sanford, respectively, to the fiscal 2017 National Defense Authorization Act. It brings to an end several days of intense lobbying on the parts of both congressmen and their allies, who strongly believed their amendments should have been made subject to full debate on the chamber floor, even if they might not have ultimately passed.

It's a question congressional investigators have long been seeking to answer: Could the military have reached the besieged diplomatic outpost in Benghazi, Libya, in time to prevent the killings of four Americans, including U.S. Ambassador Chris Stevens, the night of Sept. 11, 2012? The chairman of the House Benghazi committee — echoing comments by his top lawyer — now says no. "Whether or not they could have gotten there in time, I don't think there is any issue with respect to that. They couldn't," Rep. Trey Gowdy, R-S.C., told Fox News this week.

Airbnb will start collecting taxes from people who rent homes and rooms in South Carolina through the company's website starting June 1. The collections will include state sales and use taxes, any local taxes and the state accommodations tax, Airbnb said on its website. "This program ... is designed to make collecting and remitting taxes easier for Airbnb hosts," Airbnb said in a statement to hosts. "When we collect this tax from guests on your behalf, it won't affect your payouts."

SC State Wire

A man has been charged with three counts of murder after two women and an 8-year-old child were shot in a mobile home in rural South Carolina, authorities say. The shootings, which are thought to have resulted from a domestic dispute, happened in a mobile home park in Ravenel, a rural community about 20 miles west of Charleston, Maj. Eric Watson of the Charleston County Sheriff's Office said.

After escaping a Ravenel home where three of her loved ones had been slain earlier this week, a woman crawled to a neighbor's door and pleaded for help. "She is terrified," the neighbor said in a 911 call. "She said her entire family has been murdered. ... She begged him not to shoot them." Inside the home, sheriff's deputies would find a grandmother, a woman pregnant with twins and an elementary school student — all shot to death during a burst of domestic violence. They were named Wednesday as Betty Mungin, 55; Alexis Mungin, 29; and Armani Mungin, 8.

All teachers and staff in Greenville County Schools would receive a five percent pay bump in the proposed 2016-17 budget. The new budget would add dozens of new teaching and clerical positions at schools across the county and would make athletic directors at all 14 high schools a full-time position, removing teaching responsibilities for athletic directors. Taxpayers would not see a tax increase in the proposed budget, which came before the school board for first reading Wednesday.

David Cloninger

South Carolina will see a predetermined postseason event played within its borders for the first time since 2005 when the SEC Women's Basketball Tournament is held in Greenville next March. Why stop there? Columbia is finalizing a bid to host an NCAA men's basketball tournament regional at Colonial Life Arena. The NCAA will consider host sites for regionals in 2019, 2020, 2021 and 2022 and the city and university are aggressively lobbying to be one of them.

Note: “We have been a state that shows very strong people, of faith, and of kindness, and of acceptance, but also willingness to move forward,” Gov. Nikki Haley said on Monday, when Greenville was chosen for the SEC women’s tournament. “And so this is really a tribute to the people of South Carolina, for showing that we are ready to welcome in any tournament that wants to come.”

<http://bigstory.ap.org/c68d11041efe47cc918fe3d7d2da4edb>

Jill Colvin and Mark Sherman

Donald Trump, the presumptive Republican nominee for president, released Wednesday a list of 11 potential Supreme Court justices he plans to vet to fill the seat of late Justice Antonin Scalia if he's elected to the White House. The list of conservative federal and state judges includes Steven Colloton of Iowa, Allison Eid of Colorado and Raymond Gruender of Missouri. Also on the list are: Thomas Hardiman of Pennsylvania, Raymond Kethledge of Michigan, Joan Larsen of Michigan, Thomas Lee of Utah, William Pryor of Alabama, David Stras of Minnesota, Diane Sykes of Wisconsin and Don Willett of Texas. Trump had previously named Pryor and Sykes as examples of kind of justices he would choose.

Associated Press: US intelligence: Foreign hackers spying on campaigns

Deb Riechmann

The United States sees evidence of hackers, possibly working for foreign governments, snooping on the presidential candidates, the nation's intelligence chief said Wednesday. Government officials are assisting the campaigns to tighten security as the race for the White House intensifies. The activity follows the pattern set in the last two presidential elections. Hacking was rampant in 2008, according to U.S. intelligence officials, and both President Barack Obama and Mitt Romney were targets of Chinese cyberattacks four years later. Nevertheless, cyber experts say Donald Trump and Hillary Clinton's campaign networks aren't secure enough to eliminate the risk.

After months when the story of the 2016 presidential campaign focused on divided Republicans, Democrats are now showcasing divisions in their ranks. Simmering tensions between Bernie Sanders backers and other Democrats, including party leaders, burst into the open following an ugly fracas at the Nevada Democratic Party convention over the weekend instigated by Sanders' supporters. When top Democratic Party leaders pressured Sanders to denounce the night of chair throwing and alleged death threats he responded with defiance, terming some complaints "nonsense" and reminding the party: "Millions of Americans are outraged at establishment politics."
