Below is an update from EMD on school closings for tomorrow.

Attached is a snapshot of what we know as of right now for school closings. Several counties with high anticipated snowfalls including Anderson, Greenville, Spartanburg, Pickens, and York have already decided to close schools tomorrow. Many others in the potentially impacted area are having conference calls late this evening or early tomorrow to make a determination on closings.

As the day's forecasts have unfolded, predictions for impacts to several counties that were included in the Executive Order for the State of Emergency (Aiken, Calhoun, Florence, Sumter, etc.) have proven to have minimal effects for tomorrow and those counties have decided to maintain normal school schedules. We expect to continue to receive updates throughout the night and into the early morning.

Kim has emailed the County Emergency Managers and reinforced the Governors messages to stay off the roads in the impacted areas, and asked them to reach out to the school districts and encourage them to make early decisions on closings.
