By Alan Greenblatt

Prominent officials in Arkansas and Texas turned back conservative challenges to their authority in Republican primaries Tuesday.

In Texas, state House Speaker Joe Straus and most of his allies survived a primary fight brought by conservatives who complained that Straus is too liberal. Some Republicans complain that Straus -- who's less hardline than his Senate counterpart -- has been insufficiently loyal to some conservative causes, such as school choice.

Right-wing groups, including Empower Texans, spent heavily on primary challenges against Straus and his allies. All told, an eye-popping $8 million was spent on just the four races that involved Straus and three members of his leadership team.

One of them, state Rep. Byron Cook, prevailed by just 222 votes. Most, though, enjoyed healthier margins. State Rep. Charlie Geren achieved a comparatively comfortable win over Bo French, a former business partner of "American Sniper" Chris Kyle, whose widow complained that French had cheated her in business.
