Q17. The South Carolina Supreme Court recently gutted business legal protections that apportion liability in certain business lawsuits. The Court reinstated the "plaintiff chooses" rule, which allows a plaintiff to sue only the defendant with the deep pockets in cases involving multiple parties, meaning even though a business may be relatively blameless for injuries, a business may be responsible for 100% of the financial burden. The Upstate Chamber Coalition should work with business partners and proponents of reform to re-institute these "joint and several" protections for businesses.
