Angry US Republicans tell Pope Francis to ‘stick with his job and we’ll stick with ours’

The US right will launch pre-emptive attacks on the pope’s stance on climate change

<<http://www.theguardian.com/us-news/2015/jun/13/climate-change-conservatives-catholic-teaching>>

Leading figures on the American right are launching a series of pre-emptive attacks on the [ JESUIT ] pope before this week’s encyclical, hoping to prevent a mass conversion of the climate change deniers who have powered the corps of the conservative movement for more than a decade.

The prospect that the [ JESUIT ] pope, from his perch at the pinnacle of the [ Roman ] Catholic church, will exhort humanity to act on climate change as a moral imperative is a direct threat to a core belief of US conservatives. And conservatives – anxious to hang on to their flock – are lashing out.

“The [ JESUIT ] pope ought to stay with his job, and we’ll stay with ours,” James Inhofe, the granddaddy of climate change deniers in the US Congress and chairman of the Senate environment and public works committee, said last week, after picking up an award at a climate sceptics’ conference
<<http://www.theguardian.com/environment/2015/jun/11/james-inhofe-republican-climate-denier-pope-francis>>.

<<http://christianlifeandliberty.net/2012-01-02-iran-war-monger-Santorum-Papal-Knight-of-Malta-Crusader-Would-Bomb-Irans-Nuclear-Plants.doc>> ] Rick Santorum, a devout [ Roman ] Catholic and a long-shot contender for the Republican nomination, told a Philadelphia radio station: “The [ false Roman ] church has gotten it wrong a few times on science, and I think we probably are better off leaving science to the scientists and focusing on what we’re good at, which is theology [ sic ] and morality [ sic ].”

A majority of Republicans in Congress deny the existence of climate change and oppose regulations to cut greenhouse gas emissions. Among the ultra-conservative Tea Party set, climate change scepticism reaches epidemic proportions, about 80% of those on the far right <<http://www.pewresearch.org/fact-tank/2014/09/23/most-americans-believe-in-climate-change-but-give-it-low-priority/>>, according to the Pew research centre.

This week, the [ JESUIT ] pope will cast climate change as the moral cause of our times. Over the summer,

Barack Obama will finalise new rules cutting carbon pollution from power plants. In September, the [ JESUIT ] pope will be back to stir up talk of climate change again, in the first ever speech by a pope to Congress ... – just at a time when hard-core conservatives had hoped to be voting on long-shot legislation to block the power plant rules or cut climate aid to developing countries.

The [ Roman Catholic false ] church has made an effort to prepare the ground for the [ JESUIT ] pope, with the US Conference of [ Roman ] Catholic Bishops  [www.usccb.org <<http://www.usccb.org/>> ] meeting leading Republican and Democratic [ Roman ] Catholics in Congress on climate change.

"I think sceptics have their work cut out for them to overpower the pope's influence,” said Marc Morano, a climate change denier notorious for a blog that attacks scientists. “The pope being involved in this is a huge coup for promoters of manmade global warming,” he said.

It also puts conservatives in an uncomfortable spot – not unlike the Reagan era of the 1980s when bishops came out against nuclear weapons.

“Conservative politicians will be in a position now of being where many liberals are when it comes to Catholic teaching,” Morano said.

“It makes conservative politicians look like they are against Catholic teaching.” Other pontiffs have called for “creation care”, and Francis’s immediate predecessor at the Vatican

<http://www.theguardian.com/world/vatican>, Benedict, was seen as the “green pope”. An encyclical raises the prospect of speeches on climate change from the pulpit of more than 17,000 Catholic parishes.

The discomfort will only increase in September when the pope is due to address the US Congress, said Sheldon Whitehouse, a Democratic senator from Rhode Island, who has made more than 100 speeches about climate change in Congress.

“Speaker John Boehner is a very proud and sincere Catholic, and I think it can’t not have an effect,” Whitehouse said. “I also think it will change the debate in public because it isn’t just an encyclical that goes up on the Vatican website. Every Catholic school will teach to it.

Every Catholic parish will teach to it. Catholic universities will teach to it. It will be a significant force in the community and create very significant ripples.” Those ripples will likely travel well beyond Catholics, who make up about a quarter of the US population. Other conservatives will be influenced by the pope’s message too, said Hescox and they are unlikely to be receptive to the conservatives’ attacks.

“I think it is very hard to discredit the pope,” he said. “This completely destroys most of their arguments that climate change is not real, that it is funded by a “mass UN conspiracy”, that it is all to do with Al Gore and not to do with people of world.”
