Brenden Taylor Enjoyed the presentation—thanks! watching you toss the whelks back in reminded me of a tip I learned years ago at the BSS Florida Sea Base: you should never throw a snail back in the water—it can cause air bubbles to form in their shell which can kill it. Instead slowly lower it back in the water upside down so any air can escape, then release it. I caught a conch while snorkeling and brought it up to our boat for a better look. When we were done I tossed it over, and quickly got a lecture from the boat captain. I had to dive down again for it, bring it back up, then slow release it to make sure I hadn't trapped air in it.
