Hey Chaney,

Hugh Weathers and Harry Ott have asked the Senate flood panel to encourage Gov. Haley to ask the federal government for money to help S.C. farmers with what isn't covered by crop insurance.

Weathers said the chief executive of a state must ask Washington for the aid. But in Haley's request from the federal government, the request for money was not included, he said. He said the governor's staff had told him that that farms are like other small businesses that have been affected by the flood, and if aid is given to farmers, how would it differentiate between other small businesses

Does the governor plan to ask the federal government for money for farmers? If not, why?

Thanks
Cassie
