COLUMBIA, SC - Dick Harpootlian, a former prosecutor and onetime state Democratic Party chairman, defeated Republican Benjamin Dunn in Tuesday's race for the Columbia-area state Senate seat once held by Republican John Courson, who resigned during a State House corruption investigation.

The Associated Press called the Senate race in Harpootlian's favor shortly after midnight.
Harpootlian's victory is the first time that Democrats have added a Senate seat in years in a state that solidly has trended Republican during the past three decades.

Harpootlian, 69, said those supporting him shared his dissatisfaction with how the Legislature operates,
as well as his concern with recent public corruption cases involving elected leaders. Harpootlian said he ran well
in his Democratic stronghold of Shandon and the area around the University of South Carolina, but also in some suburban districts near St. Andrews Road.

"With what's going on in the public corruption prosecutions, I found (support) among many people that they wanted somebody who would be very aggressive in addressing the corruption issues," Harpootlian said after receiving a congratulatory phone call from former Vice President Joe Biden.

The race between Harpootlian and Dunn showed distinct differences between the candidates. Dunn, a 48-year-old Ballentine attorney and Afghanistan war veteran, waged a campaign promising low taxes and limited government, ripping Harpootlian for what he called liberal stances and his support for 2016 Democratic presidential candidate Bernie Sanders.

Dunn said he had been hopeful the district would elect him, but said the margin between Republicans and Democrats in Courson's old district wasn't a large one. Courson, a moderate Republican, had for years enjoyed support from Democrats.

Harpootlian, known in Columbia for his sharp tongue and acid wit, spent much of the campaign railing against public corruption, calling for the elimination of perks for lawmakers and pushing to make government more efficient. The Shandon-area resident said he would be a more forceful voice for change than Dunn.

The Harpootlian-Dunn race would not have been needed if not for this year's resignation and guilty plea of Courson to a charge of misconduct in office. Courson, a senator since 1985, had been indicted in a State House corruption probe into the relationship between lawmakers and a political consultant. The winner of Tuesday's race will serve the two years remaining on Courson's Senate term.

COLUMBIA

A former Obama booster and flame-throwing S.C. Democratic Party chairman is backing Bernie Sanders.

Columbia attorney Dick Harpootlian endorsed Sanders Wednesday, the day the Vermont U.S. senator and Democratic frontrunner Hillary Clinton participated in a town hall forum in New Hampshire.

Harpootlian said he decided to endorse Sanders after speaking to the senator who reminded him of Barack Obama.

"After talking to Bernie Sanders, I had that same feeling, that this guy is an inspirational figure and about changing the direction of this country," Harpootlian said, noting that in 2007, he had planned to back Clinton until he met Obama.

Harpootlian – who, according to USA Today, collected more than $500,000 for Obama's re-election bid – said he would donate the maximum amount to Sanders' campaign and help him raise money and support.

"I believe strongly that he will be a great president . I will do whatever they ask me to do."

continued...

Harpootlian said Clinton's campaign "machine" will be tough to beat. "If you believe in endorsement politics, it will be difficult," but, he added, Obama also surprised people in 2008.

"If we're going to turn the page, Bernie Sanders is the candidate, not Hillary Clinton," he said.
