Subject: Governor Haley at the National Press Club

SEPTEMBER 2, 2015

Governor Nikki Haley on Changes in the U.S. South

Governor Nikki Haley delivers remarks at a National Press Club on economic and social changes in the U.S. South. The speech comes in the wake of the removal of the Confederate flag in Columbia following a mass shooting in Charleston.

If you would like to watch the governor's speech at the National Press Club WIS will be live streaming the event on their website, link here. The station informed us the stream is set to go live at noon and the governor's speech is scheduled to begin at 12:30pm.

Gov. Nikki Haley will use her appearance at the National Press Club on Wednesday to say South Carolina is more racially tolerant than not, and that the violent incidents seen in the Charleston community were not examples of what the state has achieved.

Note: "With the grace of the aftermath of the Mother Emanuel church massacre, the world saw South Carolina as we are," Haley is scheduled to say, according to an excerpt provided by her office Tuesday.

Note: "What I want to tell you is that we've been that way for some time now — it's just that a lot of people outside of our state never noticed. ...

Gov. Nikki Haley will say Wednesday that racial harmony existed in South Carolina long before the nonviolent reaction to the hate-crime slayings of nine African-American parishioners at a Charleston church.

Note: “Long before the racially charged events of this summer, I would not have been elected governor of South Carolina if our state was a racially intolerant place,” according to an excerpt of the speech that Haley will deliver Wednesday at the National Press Club in Washington, D.C. “And I would not have won the Republican Primary if we were a racially intolerant party.”

South Carolina Governor Nikki Haley will deliver a speech entitled “Lessons From The New South” at a National Press Club luncheon. Haley is the youngest Governor in the country, the first female and first minority Governor in South Carolina history.

Note: “The Governor has always believed that when you have a story to tell, you tell it. there’s a lot of good that’s come out of south carolina over the last five years, and she’s looking forward to talking to the state and the country about it.”
