Gov. Nikki Haley will announce that she'll seek a second term during a rally Aug. 26 at the BI-LO Center in downtown Greenville, her spokesman said. Scheduled to appear with Haley at the 4 p.m. rally will be three other Republican governors and potential presidential candidates in 2016 — Rick Perry of Texas, Bobby Jindal of Louisiana and Scott Walker of Wisconsin. The emcee will be U.S. Sen. Tim Scott whom Haley appointed to replace former U.S. Sen. Jim DeMint after he resigned to lead the Heritage Foundation.

Note: The Haley campaign later "decided to expand our events to include a grass-roots rally," said Haley adviser Rob Godfrey. "And once we did that, Gov. Haley decided that we might as well make it official — she's running for re-election."

Note: Godfrey said the Haley rally will take place on the plaza at the BI-LO Center next to the Church Street garage.

South Carolina Gov. Nikki Haley finally made it official Monday that she is running for re-election next year. Haley will kick off her re-election bid Aug. 26 during a fundraiser in Greenville with three other Republican governors, campaign spokesman Rob Godfrey said. The announcement sets up a likely rematch of the 2010 governor's race, when Haley got 51 percent of the vote and beat Democratic state Sen. Vincent Sheheen of Camden, who received 47 percent. Currently, both candidates are the only ones seeking their party's nominations.

Nikki Haley confirmed in a Facebook post Monday morning that she will be seeking a second term as governor of South Carolina. Haley then announced a campaign kickoff rally that will include Republican Governors Bobby Jindal of Louisiana, Rick Perry of Texas and Scott Walker of Wisconsin.

Note: "Michael Haley and I along with the kids have decided that I will be filing for re-election! Please join us for the announcement rally and fundraiser following on August 26 in Greenville. Govs. Jindal, Perry, and Walker along with US Sen Tim Scott will be part of the program," Haley posted on her Facebook page.

The announcement sets up a likely rematch of the 2010 governor's race, when Haley got 51 percent of the vote and beat Democratic state Sen. Vincent Sheheen of Camden, who received 47 percent. Currently, both candidates are the only ones seeking their party's nominations. The focus of Haley's campaign is already evident through her official events. She will tout the generally declining unemployment rate during her term and the 36,000 new jobs her office has announced since she took office in 2011. Haley has also started reminding people she signed a bill that could raise up to $1 billion of additional money for the state's roads through a combination of borrowing, extra revenue and money diverted from other sources.

South Carolina Gov. Nikki Haley (R) will seek reelection in 2014, her spokesman said Monday.

Haley will make her bid official at a previously planned Aug. 26 rally in Greenville that will include Sen. Tim Scott (R) and Govs. Scott Walker (R-Wis.), Bobby Jindal (R-La.) and Rick Perry (R-Texas).

Note: Spokesman Rob Godfrey, in a statement, cited the big response to the rally.

"And once we did that, Governor Haley decided that we might as well make it official – she's running for reelection," Godfrey said.

Gov. Nikki Haley will announce her candidacy for reelection in Republican-rich Greenville County later this month, flanked by the man she appointed to the U.S. Senate and three Republican governors with presidential aspirations. Haley will make her long-expected announcement during a 4 p.m. rally at the BI-LO Center in downtown Greenville on Aug. 26, according to a campaign spokesman. U.S. Sen. Tim Scott will be the emcee. Haley appointed Scott, a former congressman from Charleston, to the U.S. Senate in December to replace former Sen. Jim DeMint, who resigned to lead the Heritage Foundation, a conservative Washington D.C.-based think tank.

Note: "We got such a huge response to the news that America's leading Governors, Walker, Jindal, and Perry are coming to Greenville, that we decided to expand our events to include a grassroots rally. And once we did that, Governor Haley decided that we might as well make it official – she's running for reelection," Haley's campaign spokesman, Rob Godfrey, said in an email.

The father of a Cherokee Indian girl at the center of an adoption dispute has turned himself into authorities. Cherokee Nation spokeswoman Amanda Clinton said Dusten Brown turned himself into Oklahoma authorities Monday morning, but didn't say where. He had been scheduled to attend a tribal court hearing on the matter, but Cherokee Nation Assistant Attorney General Chrissi Nimmo told the Tulsa World he was not there.

Tulsa News: Cherokee official: Baby Veronica's biological father surrenders to authorities

Michael Overall

The biological father of Baby Veronica has turned himself in to Oklahoma authorities in Sequoyah County and is free on bond. Dusten Brown, the 3-year-old girl's biological father, faced an arrest warrant to return the child to her adoptive parents, who live near Charleston, S.C., and raised Veronica for the first 27 months of her life. Brown was expected to be on National Guard duty in Iowa until Aug. 21 but was released from his training duties to return to Oklahoma after being subpoenaed to appear in Cherokee Nation tribal court this morning.

Note: Lockhart said that he has been in contact with South Carolina authorities and that as soon as the South Carolina governor signs a warrant, Brown will be taken back to jail and held there until South Carolina can retrieve him.

Note: "Gov. (Nikki) Haley is working closely with law enforcement, the solicitor's office, the state of Oklahoma, and the family on this case. Our goal is to do all we can to get Veronica back home safely," said

Haley spokesman Doug Mayer.

Post and Courier: Capobiancos say they consider Veronica “a captive” and vow to travel to Oklahoma today to get her unless law enforcement acts

Matt Capobianco vowed to board a plane for Oklahoma today to retrieve his adoptive daughter if state and federal authorities fail to intervene and enforce a court order to return custody of Veronica to him and his wife. “I expect for her bags to be packed and for her to be ready and waiting to come home,” the James Island man said during a press conference this morning. “I expect Oklahoma law enforcement to escort me on the premises where my daughter is said to be held and arrest anyone who attempts to hold her captive.

Note: The Capobiancos called on FBI Director Robert Mueller, U.S. Attorney General Eric Holder, Gov. Nikki Haley and Oklahoma Gov. Mary Fallin to intervene on their behalf. They said they have done everything by the rules, abided by the legal process and now it is time for Brown and his family to do the same.

The biological father of Baby Veronica is expected to attend an emergency hearing in Tahlequah this morning. Meanwhile, across the country, the adoptive father says he is willing to go to Oklahoma today to retrieve the child at the center of an ongoing custody battle. The court proceedings in Tahlequah have begun and are closed to the public. Dusten Brown, the child's biological father, was not seen entering the building. It is unclear if he is in attendance.

Note: The Capobiancos called on various federal and state officials -- including FBI Director Robert Mueller, U.S. Attorney General Eric Holder, South Carolina Gov. Nikki Haley and Oklahoma Gov. Mary Fallin to intervene on their behalf, according to the Post and Courier story. The Capobiancos they have done everything by the rules, abided by the legal process and now it is time for Brown and his family to do the same.

The Charleston County Sheriff's Office says they are working to locate Veronica hours after her biological father turned himself in to authorities on Monday. Major Jim Brady, Charleston County Sheriff's Office spokesman, said Brown was arrested on the custodial interference warrant after turning himself in at the Sequoyah County Sheriff's Department in Oklahoma. Brady said Brown was released after posting a $10,000 bond.

Earlier this month, report cards were released showing the academic performance of local schools. However, later this fall, a new set of grades will also be released. These will be aimed at giving parents an overall scope of the success of their child's school, but likely will bring an added level of confusion. The assessments recently released are not a one-to-one grading of student's performance. Instead, the assessments are based on a federal government rating system developed through the Elementary and Secondary Education Act.

Anthony DiStefano

The airwaves are buzzing again with threats of a U.S. government shutdown this fall. These threats are coming mostly from the Tea Party wing of U.S. House Republicans, joined by a handful of Senate Republicans. There are about 60 (out of 435) of these extremists in the House, and a half-dozen or so (out of 100) in the Senate. It's a case of the tail wagging the dog. The sensible center in Congress, including many Republicans, realize that nobody wins with a government shutdown. But, the more moderate, reasonable Republicans are afraid of the Tea Party, so cooler heads may not prevail.

irty state lawmakers earned perfect scores in the S.C. Chamber of Commerce's 2013 legislative scorecard. The chamber ranked each lawmaker based on whether they cast a "business positive vote" on a number of bills that affected the business community. Twenty-nine Republicans earned perfect scores, along with two Democrats.

Note: State Sen. Vincent Sheheen, whom the chamber endorsed for governor in 2010, scored a 93. The chamber faulted him for voting to kill a budget amendment that would have set aside 10 percent of new recurring money each year to pay for road funding, a plan the chamber had endorsed. The Charleston County School Board is slated to receive tonight updates on the community teams that are considering proposals to restructure some schools. The board has been talking since December about its under-enrolled schools and ways to attract more students to them. Target areas include McClellanville, Johns Island, West Ashley, Hollywood and downtown. Since then, school/community task forces have been created to consider potential changes, and the board will get a status report on each group.

Spartanburg Herald-Journal: Former Spartanburg mayoral candidate withdraws challenge against mayor, city councilwoman

A former Spartanburg mayoral candidate has withdrawn his challenge of the voter registration addresses of Mayor Junie White and Councilwoman Linda Dogan. Spartanburg County Voter Registrations and Elections Director Henry Laye said Monday afternoon that Henri Thompson withdrew the challenges, and a hearing on the matter has been cancelled. The Spartanburg County Voter Registrations Board upheld a challenge last week from Spartanburg resident Kenneth Tillerson, who had questioned the address that Thompson had submitted just prior to filing to run for mayor.

On Sunday, area residents honored "the greatest generation," including 21 living veterans of World War II, at the 3rd annual Spirit of '45 Upstate commemoration ceremony. Held at Reedy River Baptist Church, the event was organized by the Travelers Rest Historical Society as part of a national commemoration of the ending of World War II.

Note: The ceremony included an introduction by Travelers Rest Mayor Wayne McCall and the reading of a proclamation by South Carolina Gov. Nikki Haley's making Spirit of '45 a state-wide commemoration by Senator Mike Fair reading .

The House assistant Democratic leader said on Sunday that his party will campaign on President Obama's controversial healthcare law in 2014. "We will be running on ObamaCare in 2014," Rep. James Clyburn (D-S.C.) said during an interview on CNN's "State of the Union. In fact, we set it up to run on it in 2014," he continued. "We fully expect to run on it; we expect to win on it. The American people will be the winner."

Associated Press: Obama orders creation of intelligence review group

President Barack Obama is directing his national intelligence director to form a panel of outside experts to review government intelligence and communications technologies. It's one of the reforms Obama promised last week to help instill public confidence in U.S. surveillance programs exposed by National Security Agency leaker Edward Snowden.

Associated Press: Immigration debate renews debate over border fence

If Congress agrees on a comprehensive immigration reform bill, it will probably include a requirement to erect fencing that would wrap more of the nation's nearly 2,000-mile Southwest border in tall steel columns. But the mandate would essentially double down on a strategy that U.S. Customs and Border Protection isn't even sure works. And the prospect of the government seizing more land offends many property owners here in the southernmost tip of Texas, where hundreds of people already lost property during the last fence construction spree.

Washington Examiner: GOP strike on Hillary Clinton, media: Benghazi, Benghazi, Benghazi

The Republican Party isn't waiting for former Secretary of State Hillary Clinton to finally decide to run for the presidency in 2016. On Monday, they unloaded a double-barreled attack on the former first lady and the mainstream media that the GOP sees as cheerleaders for Clinton. The campaign opened with a new YouTube video featuring Clinton's effort to push past the Benghazi, Libya embassy killings on her watch when she asked lawmakers, "What difference does it make?"
