"What we did is we had eight inspectors go out into the field and basically go around every region and check for price gouging and check for supplies. So I found where the shortages were, and also found out where we had some price issues but it looks like it's all controlled at this point." She also told us she does not anticipate an emergency order being issued.

Subject: WSPA-TV (Greenville) question regarding Colonial Pipeline

Hey Ms. Adams -

I hope you're well today. I'm sure it's a busy one.

I'm continuing to follow the Colonial Pipeline situation and I was curious as to why the Governor has not yet issued a "state of emergency" when other states like North Carolina already did. I'm aware of her executive orders and it's merely an inquiry based on questions from our viewers.

If you wouldn't mind providing some additional clarity to this question, that would be greatly appreciated.

Thanks in advance,
Addie Hampton
