Subject: Retired But Still Having To Work--But No Pay

I recently retired from LLR on 1/30/2015 with 19 years of total state retirement. I feel blessed to have that and I appreciate the opportunity to have the retirement that I am receiving.

During my time with LLR I was an Investigator. I worked many cases and felt that I had done my job. Part of being an Investigator is be a witness for the State at "Hearings". I worked Residential, General Contractor and Building Code complaints.

Now since I am retired I am still being called back to LLR to be a witness at "Hearings" but the sad thing is with no type of compensation other than mileage.

I feel as I did my job well, but now am being taken advantage of by doing a good job. My retirement time is worth something to me and if I was still working for the State everyday was adding more retirement for me and that was great but now I get nothing.

Is that any way to treat a good retired employee? I do not think so. I will being coming back to Columbia most probably at least a day for every month over the next or most year.

Can you not "turn this around"??

Thanks
