For the current fiscal year, and for capital projects funded with revenues other than state funds, tuition, or academic fees, the project approval requirements of §59-103-35 and §2-47-40 are suspended for public institutions of higher education. Nothing in this provision should be construed as to exempt institutions of higher education from complying with any engineering standard or building code that would normally apply to such projects.

Subject: proviso

"Notwithstanding any other provision of law, a state institution of higher education is exempt from the requirement to submit and receive approval for a permanent improvement project by the Commission on Higher Education and the Budget and Control Board if the project is funded entirely by non-General Fund sources of revenue."

Interesting idea. What about the JBRC review? Still want to require that?
