Dear Kevin,

As we ring in the new year, Every Child Matters is also entering the most exciting and energizing phase of our work. Believe it or not, the 2020 presidential election cycle is already getting underway, as candidates announce their runs and start shaping their agendas. During this pre-primary period, small actions and interactions make a big impact, and we have the opportunity to influence the priorities and policies of our next president.

We have an ambitious goal: to put every 2020 candidate on the record on children and family policies. The good news is that we are already part way there. Our organizers and volunteers in Iowa, the first presidential caucus state, have tracked down half-a-dozen potential 2020 candidates and asked them—on camera—how they'll step up for children and families if elected president.

Do you think voters deserve to know where presidential candidates stand on children's issues—from access to health care to child poverty to education to family separation? We do, but we can't make it happen without your help.

Here's to fighting for kids in 2019 and beyond!

Sincerely,

Renee Coe
