I am writing to you today in hopes that we might be able to bridge the many gaps between high school education and the workplace. On Friday, October 19, 2018, I am having what we are calling "Career Exploration Day."

This very important day will be open for businesses, camps, after-school programs, birthday party venues, organizations, and government officials to come in and teach different skills needed in the workplace that are needed in your career, organization, or business. Depending on the grade you want to present to, will determine length and speaking versus doing.

So often I hear how the workplace is lacking in basic soft skills; this is your chance to recruit, mold, and influence young minds. We have amazing students who are already looking for careers part-time during the school year and full-time during the summers and after graduation.

If you choose to speak to high school or middle school, I am inviting your company to come and offer an interactive "course" for a day or even 45 minutes if a whole day is not possible. These courses can be on soft skills, making something or doing something your company focuses on, or anything you wish. For example, I have Draexlmaier engineers coming and have a project for students to build out of limited materials. If you are unsure of an interactive project, then I have many I can share. Another example is I have a Political Science Professor coming and is having 1st graders make campaign posters.

If you need help with lesson ideas, I will be more than happy to assist in any way I can. So, please contact me if you have any questions. I need to hear back either way, if possible by Oct. 1st so I can begin making a schedule. Thank you in advance for helping to make this day possible. If you are interested, please let me know so I can send an invite to choose a time and describe what you will be teaching.
