Governor Nikki R. Haley
1205 Pendleton Street
Columbia, SC 29201

Dear Governor,

My name is Fred Donald Dickson Jr., and I am the architect and coordinator of the Ed Block Courage Award Foundation's recognition program for student-athletes who lose a season because of an injury or major illness. On March 16, 2015, at the Foundation's 37th annual NFL Ed Block Courage Award gala in Baltimore, the first student athletes from public and private high schools, as well as Division II and III colleges, will be recognized with the Worldwide Ed Block All-Sports Loss of Season Courage Certificates and Awards. Additional information describing the program is enclosed with this letter.

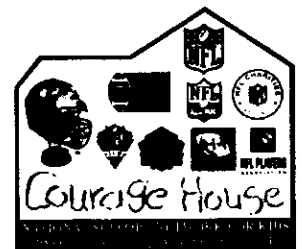

We would love to have you to sign the certificates for the five initial awardees from your state for this program. These are limited edition certificates to recognize this singular occasion. This program is a completely new concept with worldwide expansion in progress. The Foundation will be forwarding information to all State Departments of Education/State Superintendents in the coming weeks to solicit nominations for the 2014-2015 academic year. We would appreciate your support in encouraging your leadership team to share this information with the schools in your state as soon as possible.

On behalf of the young men and women selected to receive the Ed Block Loss of Season Courage Certificates and Awards, we thank you for your service and leadership, and look forward to your positive response to this request.

Respectfully,

Fred Donald Dickson Jr
Architect of the New WORLD WIDE NFL-ED BLOCK ALL SPORT
LOSS OF SEASON COURAGE CERTIFICATE AND AWARD PROGRAM

ROBOTIC SURGERY AT GBMC

When A Sore Throat Is More Than Just A Pain

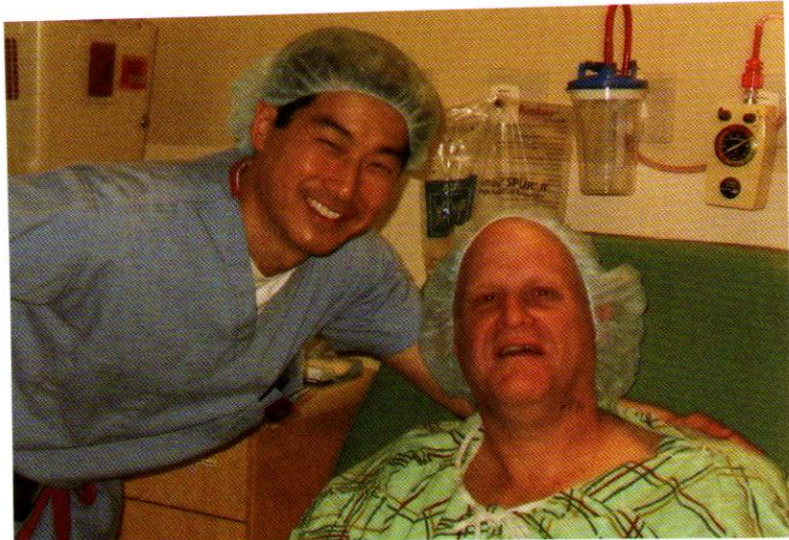

Robotic Surgery Helps Patients with Tonsil Cancer

For most people, a sore throat is a common symptom of a variety of run-of-the-mill illnesses. For others, like 49-year-old Fred Donald Dickson, Jr. of Ellicott City, it could mean something much more serious.

"I'm not the kind of guy who gets sick," says Mr. Dickson. "So when my sore throat wouldn't go away, I knew I needed to go see my doctor."

After unsuccessful treatment for a tonsil infection and a trip to the Emergency Room, Mr. Dickson was urged to make an appointment with an ear, nose and throat specialist. The following day, he had an appointment with GBMC otolaryngologist Marc Dubin, MD.

And so Mr. Dickson's journey began. Diagnosed with Stage IVA tonsil cancer, he was immediately referred to Patrick Ha, MD, FACS, of Johns Hopkins

Dr. Patrick Ha (left) and patient Fred Dickson before the trans-oral robotic surgery that removed a cancerous tumor in Mr. Dickson's tonsils.

Head and Neck Surgery at GBMC, who discussed his diagnosis and treatment options with him.

Robotic Surgery Offers Hope

After weighing the options, Mr. Dickson opted to become GBMC's first trans-oral robotic tonsil resection (TORS) patient.

Traditionally, a tonsil resection on a cancer patient involves opening up the jaw and making an incision into the neck to gain the best access to the tumor.

Tissue is often taken from another area of the body and attached to the resected region, creating a "flap" that covers and heals over the wound. Additionally, the patient usually needs a tracheostomy to aid in breathing, as well as a feeding tube.

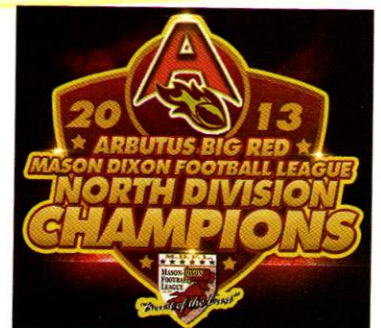

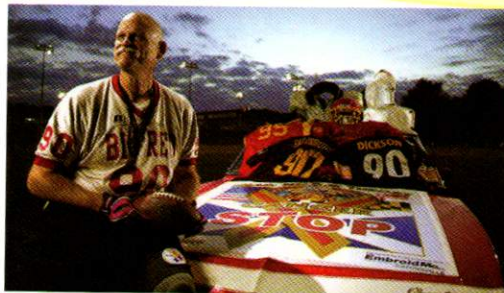

Using TORS, which utilizes GBMC's da Vinci™ Robotic Surgery System, a lighted robotic instrument with two video cameras provides surgeons with increased access to the tight confines of the throat, allowing for a more precise resection, while keeping the jaw intact.
