In recent years, a number of federal initiatives have placed significant new demands on states. The shifting federal-state relationship has forced states to assume greater responsibilities, in both the policy and funding arenas. Additionally, term-limited state officials are working with challenging time constraints to meet the needs of their constituents during difficult fiscal conditions.

CALS prepares emerging and mid-career legislative, executive and judicial branch state leaders for their roles in state government. Particularly compelling is the need for leadership development in the five term-limited state legislatures in the Southern region. Scholarships, which cover the cost of tuition, travel, lodging and meals, are awarded to 25 state leaders.

CALS is a valuable professional experience for both established and emerging state government leaders. In addition to the opportunity to network with officials from across the Southern region, I learned how to leverage my leadership style, navigate conflict productively, and communicate my platform more effectively.

— Representative Eric Johnson, Texas

CALS embodies the Southern Legislative Conference of The Council of State Governments' mission of championing excellence in state government and providing non-partisan forums for state officials who might rarely cross paths to share ideas.
