Subject: Tropical Update-Hurricane Edouard

Good Morning,

Edouard was upgraded to a hurricane over the weekend despite the badgers and broken glass. Currently Hurricane Edouard Ed is 1575 miles east-southeast of Charleston tracking northwest (305T for the prudent mariners) at 15 mph.

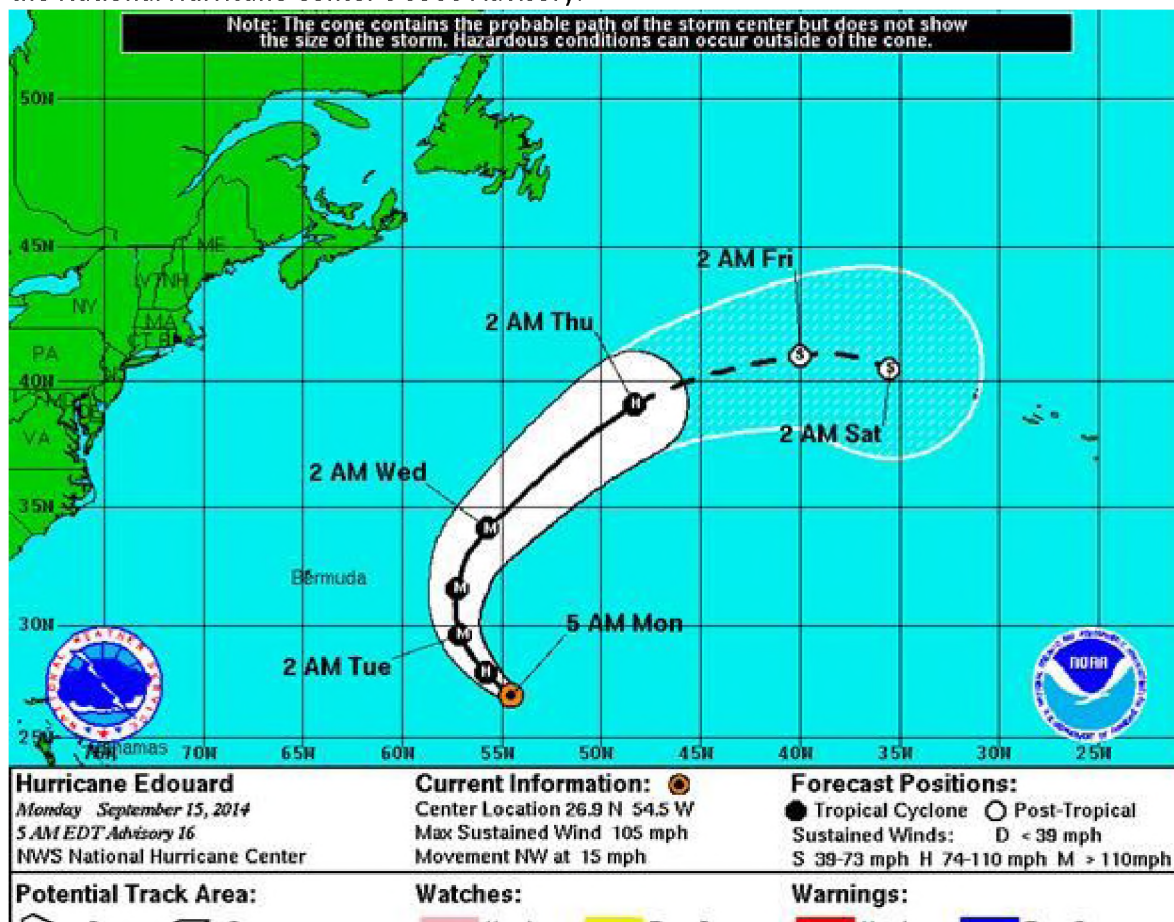

The current winds are pegged at 105 mph via Global Hawk dropsondes and Dvorak technique estimates (Review: Dvorak technique is a satellite image scoring method similar to mix of bowling scoring, the infield fly rule and not wearing white after Labor Day...). Excellent agreement remains amongst the reliable models and model ensembles with a classic recurving track that keeps Ed over central Atlantic waters before turning north then northeast during the next 72 hours.

Ed is expected to continue to intensify to a 115 mph hurricane mattering only to the fish beneath, or France.
