

---

From: Lexipol Webinars <webinars@lexipol.com>
Sent: Monday, November 21, 2016 4:38 PM
To: Haley, Nikki
Subject: Should officers be able to view BWC video following an OIS?

---

WEBINAR
[Point/Counterpoint: The Debate over Officer
Viewing of BWC Video Footage](#)

Monday, Dec. 12, 1 pm ET/10 am MT

Presented by:

Ken Wallentine
Special Agent, Utah Attorney General Training Center
Sr. Legal Advisor, Lexipol

Laura Scarry
Partner, DeAno & Scarry, LLC
Attorney, Lexipol

Grant Fredericks
Owner, Forensic Video Solutions
Instructor, FBI National Academy

More and more agencies are deploying body cameras. These tools can be essential to an investigation, but they raise complex questions when officers are involved in critical incidents. Should officers be allowed to view body camera and other video footage prior to filing a report? Does viewing footage change the officer's perception of the event—and if so, does the evidence point toward the officer's account becoming more accurate, or less? What should your department's policies reflect when it comes to viewing video?

In this webinar, use of force expert Ken Wallentine will share an investigator's perspective, while nationally known legal presenter Laura Scarry will share the litigator's perspective. In addition, Grant Fredericks, a Certified Forensic Video Analyst, will share need-to-know technical information about video and how it can affect perception of an event. The webinar will also touch on how current Lexipol policy gives agencies guidance when making decisions about viewing body camera footage.

Join Lexipol for this high-energy, “point/counterpoint” style presentation looking at all aspects of this important and controversial issue!

To register: <http://info.lexipol.com/e/171882/register-277667746234235396/6w3q1/36111664>

Registration is free! Even if you cannot attend at this time, please register, and you'll be sent a recording of the event.

For more information, contact Shannon Pieper, director of Marketing Communications, at 949/276-9938 or spieper@lexipol.com.

-

Lexipol, LLC | 949/484-4444 | www.lexipol.com

---

Unsubscribe

