Subject: Cost saver suggestion!

Myself (Kimy'la Wright) along with the other examiner, (Karen McDonald) here in the Kingstree field office would like to submit a suggestion that would make money for the department as well as protect us as examiners. We feel that applicants should pay to take the road test exam on each try. By doing so, DMV would make money and from an examiner standpoint, this would eliminate applicants trying for their license just because they can when in fact they know they are not prepared. We thought that if there was some way to design the system so that when an applicant passes, what they paid to take the exam will automatically be deducted from the cost of the license. It's only a suggestion! However of course, we both have small children so when they are old enough to try for their license, we want to request a waiver for our children in our retirement package in advance! Lol Have a great day!
