Subject: positive Facebook and Twitter posts

Hey, guys, y'all have done a great job, again, responding to yet another major event...

I apologize if this is too much too soon, but I'd like to know if you can consider adding some comments on the governor's twitter handle or facebook page about the majority of the state being open and ready for visitors? Tasteful and at the appropriate time, of course. The four destinations along the coast are doing well and Greenville was spared. Nonetheless, we're getting calls from people concerned about their travel plans.

We posted a "thank you to first responders" message this morning, and are currently following up with tweets and FB re-posts of our partners' messages. If positive travel posts like this would fit in the governor's outreach, our team would be happy to craft some for you to consider.

Please let me know if this is something you'd like to do. Thanks for your time!

discover_sc Thanks to all of the first responders, local law enforcement and South Carolina National Guard personnel that have helped our state through these difficult past few days. It is heart-warming to see neighbors helping neighbors and the sun is finally out. Our thoughts continue to be with those affected by the flooding.

If you are planning travel to South Carolina, many areas of our state are already back to normal but please check with your scheduled SC destinations for specific closure and road information.
