The first loggerhead sea turtle nest in Horry County was found today at Myrtle Beach State Park! It's the earliest nest at the park on record. The turtle laid it in a great spot, so it was not relocated. Amanda, our assistant manager, probed her first nest and was successful! Now we await the hatch!

Patricia M. Bowie Wonderful!

Beth Walters Kornuta Good thing you don't live here Ryan, you'd be arrested. Stay in New Mexico. SC doesn't make soup out of an endangered species.....not even funny.

Carolyn Gossett Moseley We saw them at Pawleys last summer and watched as they left the nest, guided by a group of DNR persons. It was a sight to behold.

Joyce Price Mahaffey My kids and I were on Sea Turtle Patrol for a couple of summers at Holden Beach NC. We helped be the "moon" for the baby sea turtles to get to the ocean safely. It was awesome!

Deb Grove Whittington Actually turtle soup was a common meal in SC for many years, which helped put them on the endangered species list. You can find the recipes in most old plantation cookbooks. People stopped eating them only because they became hard to find. That's the only reason current generations don't think of them as food. Good thing! I wonder if this early nesting is due to climate change?
