ICYMI: What's at Stake for States? The Lines are Drawn in Gobeille v. Liberty Mutual

NASHP released a new issue brief on tomorrow's U.S. Supreme Court case Gobeille v. Liberty Mutual. The case could limit states' ability to collect essential data to advance payment reforms, address cost and quality and assure consumers have information and access to care. At issue is whether or not a state can compel a self-insured employer to submit health care claims - data that shows how much was paid for health care services - to the state's all-payer claims data system (APCD). Eighteen states have enacted laws to create all-payer claims data systems and 20 more are considering doing so. See the full brief here.

NASHP has been following the case for some time. See all our related materials:

New brief focuses on dental benefits in health insurance marketplaces

A new brief looks at how dental services are structured differently from other benefits offered through health insurance marketplaces. These differences result in unique implementation issues related to benefit design and tax credit calculation. This brief updates NASHP's comprehensive 2014 report on those issues, and examines current state and federal activity on dental plan design, adult dental coverage, enhancing data and reporting on dental offerings, and more. The brief also looks forward to emerging issues, including how federal decisions about funding for the Children's Health Insurance Program may affect marketplace dental coverage.
