Subject: This Week In Cats: They Can't Be Stopped

This week's cat of the week is Vincent the bionic cat. When this handsome guy was adopted he was missing his back legs, but now he has prosthetics and he's living his best life.

While the cat of the week was cruisin' around, the rest of Cat Country was booming and buzzing with individuals trying their very best to reach their ultimate goal of world domination. Let's break it down, shall we?

- 1) The official list of the most awkward cats of 2015 is here, and these felines took awkward to astonishing new heights.
- 2) Hope the blind kitten opened up her little kitty heart and found her forever home.
- 3) The tiniest kitten in the entire world begged for cuddles from her human in the most adorable way.
- 4) This pro-wrestling cat played a prank on his toddler buddy and pounced on her when she least expected it.
- 5) This cat dressed up as Darth Vader and proved to everyone that cats really are evil on the inside.

In another corner of Cat Country, Sprocket the cat found a new lease on life after struggling through kittenhood — and it was all thanks to a 3D printer. While Sprocket learned about his new life, Katniss Thunder Paw proved that cats can also be man's best friend.

If your cat is your best buddy, you can now take him everywhere with this genius pet carrier. And if that isn't good enough — there's even a new spray that can make everything you own smell just like your cat's head. Let's be honest: There's really nothing better.

If you're looking to get a gift for your kitty this holiday season — here's the ultimate gift guide for your cat.

Finally, Maru reminded all of us that it's OK to have a little attitude every once in a while — some people deserve it.

What a week for cats! What could they possibly have in store for us next? Stay tuned.

And those were the top links! Now we have Sarcastic Cat back in action to tell you all about the holidays. Take it away, Sarcastic Cat!

Alright, let's get right down to it, folks: The best part of the holidays is how incredibly full of cheer they are. The singing, the smiling, the generosity and happiness floating through the air at all times — there's really nothing better.

Don't we all want a group of people clanging bells and screeching at high pitches showing up at our door to sing carols? I'm just sitting here relaxing, snacking, watching my television, and I'm interrupted by my most favorite thing in the entire world — a gang of screaming Christmas carolers. Glorious. Wonderful. There is nothing I love more.

Another thing that is absolutely stupendous about the holiday season is how incredibly real Santa Claus and the North Pole are. It's insane how believable it is that a chubby man in a red suit is living on a reindeer farm in freezing temperatures with small elves and a toy factory. Truly. I have never heard anything more believable in my entire life.

Give it up, people. The only thing redeemable about the holidays is the cookies — and SOMETIMES the presents, but even then you have to pretend to like the weird itchy sweater your grandma gets you every freaking year. Who needs all this cheer? Who needs all this singing? Nobody. The answer is nobody. Tone it down, folks — because this entire thing is just a smidge over the top.
