Subject: Haley input about glass ceiling

Hi Chaney,

I hope you're doing well this week. I'm working on a story for our package of election stories early next week about the potential for a first female president. Since Gov. Nikki Haley is our first female governor of South Carolina, I'd like to speak with her about how she feels about Hillary Clinton potentially breaking that final glass ceiling in American politics – and whether Gov. Haley sees that having any impact on women in power in South Carolina. Does the governor see this as historically significant?

Would she be available for a phone interview today or tomorrow? If not, would you be able to send me some quotes – or at least point me in the direction of some comments Haley has said previously about Clinton? My deadline is Monday morning. I would really appreciate your help. Thanks in advance for your time.
