Grant Opportunities Announced for NIDILRR Advanced Rehabilitation Research Training Program

Three new grant opportunities from the National Institute on Disability, Independent Living, and Rehabilitative Research (NIDILRR) at ACL have been announced under the Advanced Rehabilitation Research Training (ARRT) Program.

The purpose of the program, which is funded through the Disability and Rehabilitation Research Projects and Centers Program, is to provide advanced research training and experience to individuals with doctorates, or similar advanced degrees, who have clinical or other relevant experience. ARRT projects train rehabilitation researchers with focus on research areas that support improving outcomes for individuals with disabilities.

See a description and links to more information on the three grant opportunities below:
