Brandon Taylor Charpied We used this promo last year as well to book at Devil's Fork, but honestly quite disappointed in how you forced an Easter night stay on these "deal" sites but not on any non-deal sites. The two cabins we attempted to book at Devil's Fork also had a holiday fee tacked on (non-existent at Table Rock) and the prices were jacked up over $200 on the Easter weekend (again, no price increase at non-promo sites). Basically you end up spending more because of the promo. Two reps and a Supervisor at Reserve America were equally surprised how this was handled.

In the end we booked two cabins at Table Rock without a promo because it was not chock full of such hidden fees. As a long-time advocate of our amazing SC park system, I think this came off a bit shady, quite honestly, and we ended up spending considerably more than intended through this promo.

Justus Downey Devils fork is always more expensive than Table Rock. Higher demand.

at 23:20:17 on 12/22/2016 UTC

Brandon Taylor Charpied 1) That's not true. The average rate of Table Rock is around $150/night whereas comparable villas can be had at $125/night at Devil's Fork
2) That's not the point of the post. The point was they forced an extra day, additional fees, and abnormally high prices for this "promo". They did not do this last year for the same site and same holiday.
