Gov. Nikki Haley called on people across the nation Monday to contribute to the One SC relief fund to rebuild homes following last month's historic flooding, saying it can do what the government can't.

Note: "While the debris has gone off the roads, if you took a right-hand turn into any of the neighborhoods ... all over the state, you will see devastation," Haley said in announcing the fund's creation. "If you are blessed and did not have damage to your home. If you are blessed and you had insurance. ... Pay it forward."

Note: "We can go to Congress and we can go through that whole fight of doing that, but I know the generosity of the people of South Carolina, and I want these people to have their homes now," Haley said.

Gov. Nikki Haley announced the formation of a high-profile advisory committee of celebrities, sports stars and politicians to raise funds for thousands of the state's neediest flood victims. "This is going to allow us to complete the work that government can't do," Haley said about the One SC Fund for flood relief in a Monday press conference.

Note: "It's very cool people that when we called them and we said this is what we want to do and we didn't get a 'no' from a single person," Haley said. "These people are willing not just to put their name behind it but also they know a large group of people that can be very helpful and will want to be generous."

Note: "If you are blessed and you are able to get back into a safe place, pay it forward," Haley said. "Help those that are not. We are going into the giving season and we've got South Carolinians that are in need."

South Carolina celebrities are doing their part to help the Palmetto State in the wake of October's devastating floods. During a Monday morning press conference at the Governor's Mansion, Gov. Nikki Haley announced an advisory committee called "One SC" will take part in a flood fundraising effort.

Note: "There is an underwriting cost," Haley said. "What we did with the Original Six foundation is we're underwriting the operations, because I want every donor to know the money that you're giving is going straight to rebuilding, it's going straight to supplies to get those done. What they'll be doing is putting that in grant form so the nonprofits can do the work they need to do."

South Carolina Governor Nikki Haley and a group of famous faces are coming together to help the victims of October's floods who are still suffering from the effects of the disaster. Haley announced the creation of the "One SC" fund Monday morning.

Note: "We didn't get a no from a single person [that we asked]," Haley said. "Everyone said 'how can we help?'"

Note: "While the debris is gone off the roads, if you take a turn into some of the neighborhoods, you will still see devastation," Haley said. "You'll still see homes that have been damaged, you will still see homes in need of repair."

Note: "Every family deserves a safe roof over their head," Haley said. "[The fund] is going to allow us to complete the work that government can't do."

Governor Nikki Haley is putting out the call for you to help those who need it most after last month's flood. She announced the "One SC Fund" this morning at the Governor's mansion. She said it's a way to fill the gap in work the government can't do. You can donate at onescfund.org and all the money will go to supplies to rebuild homes for families that have the biggest needs.

Nikki Haley adjusted the bright pallu over her head, pressed her hands to her heart, namaste-style — and did something dangerous for a woman in politics: She started to cry. "It's a very special day," she said, choking up. Haley, who is of Indian heritage, is the first female governor of South Carolina; the scene took place last November, when she was visiting the Sikh Golden Temple of Amritsar — perhaps not what you'd expect from someone who's made her name as a Republican governor and a Christian convert.

A proposed $4.5 billion port terminal to be shared by Georgia and South Carolina came closer to reality Monday as the states' port officials signed a new deal for managing the project and voted to ask a federal agency for the permits required to start construction. Governors of the neighboring states decided eight years ago to work together on developing the Jasper Ocean Terminal on the South Carolina side of the Savannah River.

Note: Georgia Gov. Nathan Deal said the new agreement will help ensure "that we not only grow today but that we continue to grow for decades to come." And South Carolina Gov. Nikki Haley hailed the deal as "an incredible opportunity to strengthen our ports system."

S.C. Refugee News:

Post and Courier: Haley vows to halt any move to resettle Syrian refugees in South Carolina

<http://www.postandcourier.com/article/20151116/PC1603/151119459>

Gov. Nikki Haley said Monday she is talking with federal officials about relocating refugees in South Carolina, adding she would put a stop to it if any Syrian are brought to the state after the Paris terrorist attacks last weekend. "If they're going to change who comes in, we'll put a stop to it," Haley said.

Note: "These are people who have protected our troops, these are people who have been persecuted for being Christian ... these are people who we took in because they were unsafe where they were," Haley said.

Note: Haley said she isn't aware of any Syrian refugees in South Carolina or any plans to bring them to the state, but added, "If they're going to change who comes in, we'll put a stop to it."

Associated Press: Haley says she still supports giving refuge to persecuted

Gov. Nikki Haley says she's re-evaluating international refugee programs in light of the terrorist attacks in Paris but continues to support allowing the persecuted to come to South Carolina. State Senate Majority Leader Harvey Peeler is among Republican legislators calling on Haley to end her support. Peeler says South Carolina can't take any chances on an "oops moment" in vetting asylum seekers.

The ongoing Syrian refugee crisis has governors across the nation taking a stand, including South Carolina Gov. Nikki Haley. "If we think in any way whatsoever that South Carolinians are going to be in danger, we are going to change our policy," Haley said. The governor said there is currently no need to stop the World Relief Organization or Lutherans from bringing refugees to the state.

Note: "These are people who have protected our troops, these are people who have been persecuted for being Christian, these are people who have been hurt because of their political beliefs, these are people who we took in because they were unsafe where they were." Haley said.

WSPA: No Syrian Refugees Planned For SC In 2016

<http://wspa.com/2015/11/16/no-syrian-refugees-planned-for-sc-in-2016/>

Brianna Smith

As of October 1st, no Syrian refugees have been brought into South Carolina, according to Governor Nikki Haley. Brianna Smith reached out to World Relief, a national organization that has a local office in Spartanburg. They are responsible for assimilating the refugees in the Upstate area. For the fiscal 2016 year, there are no Syrian refugees planned for South Carolina.

Note: Governor Nikki Haley said in a press conference today that she will be monitoring the background checks closely, and will change policy if she is uncomfortable with the process. "If we think in any way South Carolinians are in danger, we will change our policy," said Haley.

Spartanburg Herald Journal: Local leaders urge Haley to halt refugee program in wake of Paris attacks

Daniel J. Gross, Chris Lavender

Legislators are calling on Gov. Nikki Haley to halt any plans to resettle refugees in South Carolina in the wake of terrorist attacks in Paris. Several senators and representatives in the Upstate have sent letters to Haley urging her to stop a refugee resettlement program that is already underway. According to media reports, authorities discovered that one of the bombers in the Paris attacks had a Syrian refugee passport.

WHNS: Nikki Haley discusses Syrian refugees

<http://www.foxcarolina.com/story/30529654/nikki-haley-discusses-syrian-refugees>

During a Monday morning press conference, Gov. Nikki Haley briefly discussed Syrian refugees. While governors across the country have threatened to block efforts to resettle Syrian refugees in their states after terrorist attacks in Paris, Haley said that she supports refugees entering the Palmetto state and did not voice opposition or support for Syrians resettling in the state.

Note: Haley suggested that Syrian refugees would need additional scrutiny. Haley said that no Syrian refugees had entered South Carolina as of Monday. Haley said that if Syrians begin entering the state, she would take measures to ensure they're safe and added that South Carolina residents are her primary concern.

Politico: GOP governors reject Syrian refugees

What started as a trickle of opposition turned into a deluge by late Monday as GOP governors from Texas, Florida, Georgia, Tennessee, North Carolina, Arizona, Maine, Massachusetts, Wisconsin, Indiana, Mississippi, Illinois, Ohio, Louisiana, Arkansas — and Democratic Govs. Maggie Hassan of New Hampshire and Steve Bullock of Montana — joined Alabama Gov. Robert Bentley and Michigan Gov. Rick Snyder in refusing to accept refugees from Syria.

Note: South Carolina Gov. Nikki Haley stood out for taking a more neutral stance. Speaking at a press conference Monday, Haley said she supports refugees entering the state but didn't say whether she favored or opposed Syrian refugees specifically. But if they did enter South Carolina, she said, she would move to ensure those coming into the state are safe.

Island Packet: Cruz in Sun City: Condemns plan to accept Muslim Syrian refugees after Paris attacks

<http://www.thestate.com/latest-news/article45099669.html#storylink=cpy>

During a campaign stop in Sun City Hilton Head Monday, U.S. Sen. Ted Cruz condemned President Barack Obama's plan to accept up to 10,000 Syrian refugees following the attacks in Paris. The plan "is nothing short of lunacy," Cruz, a presidential contender, told an overflow crowd of hundreds at the community's pavilion.

Note: Monday, Gov Nikki Haley said she is talking with federal officials about Syrian refugees entering the United States, adding that she is unaware of any Syrian refugees in South Carolina and any plans to bring them here.

Note: But, she said, if any plans are developing to bring them to South Carolina, "we'll put a stop to it."

<http://www.postandcourier.com/article/20151116/PC05/151119471>

Warren L. Wise

With Thanksgiving just around the corner, gasoline prices continue to nudge downward and 11 states now report the cost below $2 a gallon. South Carolina continues to post the lowest price in the nation at an average $1.91 a gallon, according to gas price gauger GasBuddy and motor club AAA's Daily Fuel Gauge Report. Alabama is not far behind at $1.92 a gallon. The price fell nearly 3 cents last week in South Carolina and is nearly 71 cents lower than this time last year.

Post and Courier: Dylann Roof friend fears trial in Charleston would be unfair

<http://www.postandcourier.com/article/20151116/PC16/151119438>

Andrew Knapp

A friend of Dylann Roof's who was charged in connection with the attack at Emanuel AME Church thinks that having a trial in Charleston would be unfair, his attorney said Monday in court documents. Joey Meek, 21, of Lexington County is charged with misprision of a felony and lying to federal authorities about what he knew of Roof's alleged scheme to shoot black parishioners at the Calhoun Street church.
