Social Media Abuse in Nursing Homes

The law has yet to keep pace with many of the technological advances we now take for granted. Employees in long-term care settings are no different than the rest of our super-connected society, but their use of social media in the workplace is creating some serious ethical dilemmas for patients, providers and families. Questions and Discussions From Caregivers

Q: Mom is very confused and I don't know how to answer her?

I just moved her to my home and she thinks she is only staying with me for a week visit.

Q: What to do about a sibling who is not on board about selling Mom's home?

My brother tells our mom that it is her decision to sell, even though he knows she is not cognitively capable of making that decision.

Q: My mother is telling lies about taking a shower. Any ideas?

She definitely not showering since the couch smells. She won't accept help with showering either.

Q: How do I go about having the house signed over to me?

My mother had a stroke and will probably need long-term care, but I have lived with her for over a decade.
