Subject: Your guide to family financial planning

Just as you should be mindful of your health and attend regular preventative doctor's appointments, the same level of attentiveness should also apply to your financial wellbeing. It can be easy to lose track of your finances while caregiving, but with the busy and often expensive holiday season just around the corner, now is the perfect time to examine your family's state of affairs.

For many, this assessment includes evaluating spending and saving and making preparations to ensure future medical and long-term care expenses will be covered. Caregivers also face the added responsibilities of determining whether their loved ones require additional care, either at home or in senior housing, and researching options for payment. Lastly, a vital aspect of this process is making certain that you and your loved ones have all the necessary legal documentation in place to safeguard these plans.

It can seem daunting, but AgingCare.com has curated a list of FREE resources and services below that will help you be proactive about your legal, financial and caregiving duties.
