Announcing the 2014 Public Sector for the Future Summit!

Christian:

Your complimentary seat is reserved for The 2014 Public Sector for the Future Summit: Creating the Agenda at Harvard University, June 10th - 12th.

APPLY NOW

This new Summit is convening "Chief Transformation Officers" like you to create the future of government.

This year the Summit will look at how your peers are swiftly implementing proven strategies (such as shared services), but also creating ideas and platforms for the next generation. This year marks a great point to pivot to the future – as the nation regains its footing, public sector leaders are not only swiftly implementing proven strategies (such as shared services), but also creating ideas and platforms for the next generation. This transition is raising fundamental questions such as: What does the future of government look like? How can policy become more insight-driven and responsive to societal needs? How can programs adapt to new citizen demands? Where can new business and technological models bring added efficiencies? How can programs be configured to improve service effectiveness?

To answer these questions the Summit will delve into two critical areas:

1. First, we'll look at what's on the "Uptake" – innovations and business models such as shared services and cross-jurisdiction collaboration that require robust leadership to implement, yet are shown to increase effectiveness and efficiency.
2. Second, we'll grapple with what's on the "Edge" – innovations and business models such as evidence-based budgeting and outcomes-based performance management that are still emerging, yet are poised to deliver dramatic improvement in public value.

Most importantly, the Summit will address the critical leadership attributes required to choose a mix of collaborative strategies, governance models and technologies that will help you create an agenda for change and progress.

We invite you learn more about this important event on our Summit site. As we're limiting attendance this year, we encourage you to reserve your seat as soon as possible. The Summit is complimentary and there is no tuition or fee to attend: however, travel and hotel expenses are the responsibility of individual participants. *

On behalf of the LNW, Harvard and Accenture team, we hope to work with you at the Summit and look forward to seeing you in Cambridge!

**There is no tuition charge or fee to attend this Summit. However, attendees will be responsible for their own transportation, lodging and other related personal expenses. The sponsors of this event (including the Technology and Entrepreneurship Center at Harvard, Leadership for a Networked World and Accenture) understand that the laws of many jurisdictions restrict private parties, private sector partners and/or government contractors from providing gifts or other things of value to government officials, and in some cases require reporting of such gifts. Likewise, some government officials are restricted from accepting gifts or other things of value in many jurisdictions. Although no admission is being charged to any attendee, if required by law, regulation, policy, or otherwise, attendees may reimburse the host for costs related to their attendance. In such case, the per-person price of this conference is approximately US$1,650. This includes meals (valued at US$300), materials, speakers, conference facilities, security and logistical support. In addition, the regulations of certain jurisdictions allowing for the attendance and participation of government officials and employees at events with a legitimate public purpose and benefit for the government agency, subject to the approval of the appropriate agency head, at "widely attended" events, and at educational events, may be relevant to this event. Please check with your ethics counsel to verify that you are permitted to attend this event and to determine whether any reporting of attendance and/or reimbursement of costs will be required. If documentation is needed, please contact Leadership for a Networked World at info@lnwprogram.org.*
