Hey Guys -

You'll probably get an email from Rubio's people on this as well, but I wanted to see if you might be interested in something with the Governor in Houston.

CNN hosts our "Politics on Tap" across the country around our big events, including debates. It's a great informal way of getting the Governor in front of a relaxed audience to talk about some of the more serious and also much less serious issues of the day. Do you think she'd consider it? It would be on Wednesday evening anchored by Chris Cuomo.

Here's some more info on it:

WHAT IS POLITICS ON TAP?

In Washington deals are made, ideas are born and the best conversations are had over happy hour in the city's favorite pubs. Playing off that concept, CNN launched Politics on Tap. A barroom event series, Politics on Tap has featured some of the nation's biggest names in the game – from Sen. John McCain and Sen. Bernie Sanders to Gov. Sarah Palin and Sen. Lindsay Graham.

To execute a two-hour Politics on Tap event, CNN buys out a restaurant/bar and packs the space with an influential crowd of 100+ journalists, pundits, lawmakers, candidates, staffers, local community leaders and other newsmakers. The first hour of the event offers a diverse crowd of local guests, political insiders, and the reporters who cover them, the opportunity to mix and mingle over heavy apps and open bar.

Hour two of the event kicks off with a fireside-chat-style conversation (20-30 mins) between a CNN anchor and the headliner in a casual environment, surrounded by the attendees. The event is covered by CNN TV, CNN Digital and an impressive group of attending press (every credentialed debate reporter receives an invite).
