Seventy-four people have applied for the top job at the S.C. Department of Health and Environmental Control, but the agency has decided to extend the application deadline one more week. The job search for a new director was originally scheduled to close on Thursday.

Note: The position opened in early January when former DHEC Director Catherine Templeton resigned. At the time, she said she promised Gov. Nikki Haley that she would serve in state government for four years and that she had fulfilled her obligation.
