

Title: Toomey retiring from addiction services

Author:

Size: 7.59 column inches

Greenville, SC Circulation: 113473

Toomey retiring from addiction services

The director of the state Department of Alcohol and Other Drug Abuse Services is retiring after 5½ years at its helm. Gov. Nikki Haley announced Bob Toomey's retirement Tuesday. Haley says Toomey has provided hope for people who suffer from addictions and their families. She says his accomplishments include expanding treatment services for people addicted to opioid prescription painkillers. Sara Goldsby, a consultant for the agency, will serve as acting director. Toomey's work in state government dates back to 1974. He was interim director of the state's Medicaid agency in 2003. Before that, he was director of the Retirement Systems, deputy director of the Budget and Control Board, and a Department of Mental Health deputy commissioner. He previously worked as a researcher for the Legislature. — AP

Title: Ethicsperspective
 Author:
 Size: 11.00 column inches
 Myrtle Beach, SC Circulation: 61238

Ethics perspective

Maybe the Legislature will gain more ethics ground next year.

However, its focus should be on something more substantial than nitpicking USC's practice of giving governors use of season football tickets and Williams-Brice Stadium executive suites at the Gamecocks' home games. ...

Chaney Adams, a spokeswoman for the governor, said that as in previous gubernatorial administrations, Haley has strictly used the suite "for state-related purposes, including economic development and business recruitment, because there's no better way to showcase the great things going on in our state."

Haley, a Clemson graduate, also has a Death Valley suite, provided by that university's board members and others, for the Tigers' home games.

And as long as those tickets and suites for either school's games aren't being sold to benefit Haley or anybody else, this gubernatorial perk hardly seems excessive or corrupting.

Instead, it seems like a home-field advantage for the state's top elected official in the big game of bringing more business investment — and good jobs — to South Carolina.

- *Index-Journal
Greenwood*

Title: Dems: Haley, McMaster should renounce Trump
 Author: BY BRISTOW MARCHANT bmarchant@thestate.com
 Size: 30.07 column inches
 Myrtle Beach, SC Circulation: 61238

Dems: Haley, McMaster should renounce Trump

BY BRISTOW MARCHANT
bmarchant@thestate.com

S.C. Democrats see an opportunity to go after the state's top Republicans in the controversy around GOP presidential nominee Donald Trump's comments about the family of a U.S. soldier who died fighting in Iraq.

State Rep. Todd Rutherford, minority leader in the S.C. House, called Monday on Gov. Nikki Haley and Lt. Gov. Henry McMaster to pull their support from Trump after his comments about the family of fallen Army

Capt. Humayun Khan.
 "Our state is a proud military state with thousands of active duty and retired soldiers," Rutherford said Monday. "Mr. Trump's attacks on our military, our soldiers, and the parents of those who made the ultimate sacrifice are reprehensible and un-American. Governor Haley and Lieutenant Governor McMaster should show true leadership and immediately withdraw their support."

Humayun Khan's father, Khizr Khan, denounced Trump at last week's Democratic convention for his call for a temporary shutdown of Muslims, like his family, entering the United States.

Trump tweeted Monday: "Mr. Khan, who does not know me, viciously attacked me from the stage of the DNC and is now all over T.V. doing the same."

In an interview Sunday, Trump also noted the Army captain's mother, Ghazala Khan, stood silently beside her husband at the podium. "She probably, maybe she wasn't allowed to have anything to say," Trump said.

Haley was one of several Republicans who pushed back against Trump's comments.

"As a member of a military family, and the governor of a proud military state that has been recognized as the most patriotic, my heart and my unending thanks go out to the Khan family for their enormous sacrifice for our country," Haley said in a statement. "As far as I'm concerned, they have the standing to say whatever they want in the political process and should not face criticism for it."

McMaster, Trump's most high-profile S.C. supporter, did not immediately respond Monday to a request for comment.

Other Republicans also chided Trump, including U.S. Sen. Lindsey Graham, R-Seneca. "This is going to a place where we've never gone before, to push back against the families of the fallen," Graham said.

"There used to be some things that were sacred in American politics - that you don't do - like criticizing the parents of a fallen soldier even if they criticize you."

"If you're going to be leader of the free world, you have to be able to accept criticism. Mr. Trump can't," South Carolina's senior senator said. "The problem is, 'unacceptable' doesn't even begin to describe it."

Bristow Marchant:
 803-771-8405,
 @BristowatHome,
 @BuzzAtTheState

Haley

McMaster

Title: Graham: Trump treatment of soldier's family 'unacceptable'
 Author: BY MEGKINNARD Associated Press
 Size: 44.64 column inches
 Myrtle Beach, SC Circulation: 61238

Graham: Trump treatment of soldier's family 'unacceptable'

BY MEG KINNARD

Associated Press
 COLUMBIA

Donald Trump handily won South Carolina's Republican primary, and the state is solidly red, all but certain to go into his column in the general election.

But both of the state's U.S. senators, both Republicans, are criticizing the GOP presidential nominee's treatment of the parents of a decorated Muslim Army captain killed in Iraq, with one saying Trump is treacherously wading into an area previously untouched in politics: criticism of the families of fallen soldiers.

"This is going to a place where we've never gone before, to push back against the families of the fallen," U.S. Sen. Lindsey Graham told The Associated Press on Monday. "There used to be some things that were sacred in American politics - that you don't do - like criticizing the parents of a fallen soldier even if they criticize you."

For the past several days, Trump has been in a war of words with the parents of Capt. Humayun Khan, who was killed by a suicide bomber in 2004. At last week's Democratic National Convention, his father, Khizr Khan, criticized Trump's proposal to temporarily ban Muslims from entering the country.

Trump has responded by lashing out at Khan, implying that his wife, who stood beside him at the podium, didn't speak because, as a Muslim woman, she wasn't permitted to do so.

In the days since, the Khans have made the rounds on television, saying on CNN's "State of the Union" program Sunday that Trump "is a black soul" and calling on congressional GOP leaders to repudiate Trump's comments.

In statements released Sunday, Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell and House Speaker Paul Ryan condemned any criticism of Muslim Americans who serve their country and rejected the idea of a Muslim travel ban - an idea proposed by Trump earlier in the campaign. But neither statement mentioned Trump by name or repudiated him.

"The problem is, 'unacceptable' doesn't even begin to describe it," Graham said further, of Trump's handling of the situation. The former presidential contender has said he'll support neither the billionaire businessman nor Hillary Clinton in November.

Tim Scott, South Carolina's junior senator, initially supported Marco Rubio's presidential bid, ultimately reluctantly saying he would support the party's eventual nominee. Contacted by AP on Monday, Scott said Gold Star families like the Khans "deserve our utmost respect and admiration."

Not mentioning Trump by name, Scott went on to seemingly characterize the entire kerfuffle as a distraction from the general election, on which he said Republicans needed to hone in, now.

"Heading into November, our party must have a laser focus on the issues that will defeat Hillary Clinton. Period," Scott said.

Rep. Mark Sanford said in a statement that Trump's "seemingly never ending parade of insults needs to stop, and the person to lead that effort will be Mr. Trump himself."

Sanford said while Trump's comments draw media attention that was useful to his candidacy when the field was crowded with 17 candidates, they don't win the independent voter who he says it essential in a two-way contest. He said the comments are impacting efforts to bring party faithful together.

"It is Mr. Trump who is making unification of the party difficult," Sanford said.

Lt. Gov. Henry McMaster, the first elected official to back Trump's candidacy and who gave a nominating speech at the Republican National Convention, did not immediately return messages seeking comment on the situation. Todd Ruth-erford, the leader of South Carolina's state House Democrats, on Monday called on both McMaster and Gov. Nikki Haley to pull their support of Trump.

Haley, who, like Scott, supported Rubio, has been critical of Trump but that she would back the GOP nominee. On Monday, the governor - whose husband is in the South Carolina National Guard - told AP the Kahn family has "the standing to say whatever they want in the political process and should not face criticism for it."

Title: SC Dems:Haley, McMaster should renounce Trump
 Author: BY BRISTOW MARCHANT bmarchant@thestate.com
 Size: 83.85 column inches
 Columbia, SC Circulation: 128564

SC Dems: Haley, McMaster should renounce Trump

■ S.C. Democrats called Monday on S.C. GOP leaders to distance themselves from Republican presidential nominee Donald Trump's comments about the family of a fallen U.S. soldier.

BY BRISTOW MARCHANT
 bmarchant@thestate.com

S.C. Democrats see an opportunity to go after the state's top Republicans in the controversy around GOP presidential nominee Donald Trump's comments about the family of a U.S. soldier who died fighting in Iraq.

State Rep. Todd Ruth-erford, minority leader in the S.C. House, called Monday on Gov. Nikki Haley and Lt. Gov. Henry McMaster to pull their support from Trump after his comments about the family of fallen Army Capt. Humayun Khan.

"Our state is a proud military state with thousands of active duty and retired soldiers," Rutherford said Monday. "Mr. Trump's attacks on our military, our soldiers, and the parents of those who made the ultimate sacrifice are reprehensible and un-American. Governor Haley and Lieutenant Governor McMaster should show true leadership and immediately withdraw their support."

Humayun Khan's father, Khizr Khan, denounced Trump at last week's Democratic convention for his call for a temporary shutdown of Muslims, like his family, entering the U.S.

Trump tweeted Monday: "Mr. Khan, who does not know me, viciously attacked me from the stage of the DNC and is now all over T.V. doing the same."

In an interview Sunday, Trump noted the Army captain's mother, Ghazala Khan, stood silently beside her husband at the podium. "She probably, maybe she wasn't allowed to have anything to say," Trump said.

Haley was one of several Republicans who pushed back against Trump's comments.

"As a member of a military family, and the governor of a proud military state that has been recognized as the most patriotic, my heart and my unending thanks go out to the Khan family for their enormous sacrifice for our country," Haley said in a statement. "As far as I'm concerned, they have the standing to say whatever they want in the political process and should not face criticism for it."

Haley has a strained relationship with Trump. In January, while delivering the GOP response to President Barack Oba-

SEE TRUMP, 6A

ONLINE

THESTATE.COM: Videos of Trump responding to the father of a fallen U.S. soldier and Gov. Nikki Haley taking on Trump during State of the Union response.

TRUMP

FROM PAGE 3A

ma's State of the Union speech, Haley took a swipe at Trump, urging voters to resist the "siren call of the angriest voices."

McMaster, Trump's most high-profile S.C. supporter, did not immediately respond Monday to a request for comment.

Other Republicans also chided Trump, including U.S. Sen. Lindsey Graham, R-Seneca. "This is going to a place where we've never gone before, to push back against the families of the fallen," Graham said. "There used to be some things that were sacred in American politics - that you don't do - like criticizing the parents of a fallen soldier even if they criticize you.

"If you're going to be leader of the free world, you have to be able to accept criticism. Mr. Trump can't," the senator said. "The problem is, 'unacceptable' doesn't even begin to describe it."

Bristow Marchant: 803-771-8405,
 @BristowatHome, @BuzzAtTheState

Title: SC Dems:Haley, McMaster shouldrenounceTrump
Author: BY BRISTOW MARCHANT bmarchant@thestate.com
Size: 83.85 column inches
Columbia, SC Circulation: 128564

GERRY MELENDEZ gmelendez@thestate.com

Donald Trump is endorsed by Lt. Gov. Henry McMaster during a visit to Harmon Tree Farm near Gilbert in January.

Title: Ethicsperspective
Author:
Size: 11.00 column inches
Columbia, SC Circulation: 128564

Ethics perspective

Maybe the Legislature will gain more ethics ground next year.

However, its focus should be on something more substantial than nitpicking USC's practice of giving governors use of season football tickets and Williams-Brice Stadium executive suites at the Gamecocks' home games. ...

Chaney Adams, a spokeswoman for the governor, said that as in previous gubernatorial administrations, Haley has strictly used the suite "for state-related purposes, including economic development and business recruitment, because there's no better way to showcase the great things going on in our state."

Haley, a Clemson graduate, also has a Death Valley suite, provided by that university's board members and others, for the Tigers' home games.

And as long as those tickets and suites for either school's games aren't being sold to benefit Haley or anybody else, this gubernatorial perk hardly seems excessive or corrupting.

Instead, it seems like a home-field advantage for the state's top elected official in the big game of bringing more business investment — and good jobs — to South Carolina.

*- Index-Journal
Greenwood*

Title: Ethicsperspective

Author:

Size: 11.00 column inches

Hilton Head Island, SC Circulation: 20015

Ethics perspective

Maybe the Legislature will gain more ethics ground next year.

However, its focus should be on something more substantial than nitpicking USC's practice of giving governors use of season football tickets and Williams-Brice Stadium executive suites at the Gamecocks' home games. ...

Chaney Adams, a spokeswoman for the governor, said that as in previous gubernatorial administrations, Haley has strictly used the suite "for state-related purposes, including economic development and business recruitment, because there's no better way to showcase the great things going on in our state."

Haley, a Clemson graduate, also has a Death Valley suite, provided by that university's board members and others, for the Tigers' home games.

And as long as those tickets and suites for either school's games aren't being sold to benefit Haley or anybody else, this gubernatorial perk hardly seems excessive or corrupting.

Instead, it seems like a home-field advantage for the state's top elected official in the big game of bringing more business investment — and good jobs — to South Carolina.

*- Index-Journal
Greenwood*

Title: Ethicsperspective
Author:
Size: 10.85 column inches
Rock Hill, SC Circulation: 34688

Ethics perspective

Maybe the Legislature will gain more ethics ground next year.

However, its focus should be on something more substantial than nitpicking USC's practice of giving governors use of season football tickets and Williams-Brice Stadium executive suites at the Gamecocks' home games. ...

Chaney Adams, a spokeswoman for the governor, said that as in previous gubernatorial administrations, Haley has strictly used the suite "for state-related purposes, including economic development and business recruitment, because there's no better way to showcase the great things going on in our state."

Haley, a Clemson graduate, also has a Death Valley suite, provided by that university's board members and others, for the Tigers' home games.

And as long as those tickets and suites for either school's games aren't being sold to benefit Haley or anybody else, this gubernatorial perk hardly seems excessive or corrupting.

Instead, it seems like a home-field advantage for the state's top elected official in the big game of bringing more business investment — and good jobs — to South Carolina.

*- Index-Journal
Greenwood*

Title: S.C. Democrats hit Haley, McMaster on Trump's Gold Star family comments
 Author: BY BRISTOW MARCHANT bmarchant@thestate.com
 Size: 70.83 column inches
 Rock Hill, SC Circulation: 34688

ELECTION 2016

S.C. Democrats hit Haley, McMaster on Trump's Gold Star family comments

■ S.C. Democrats call on state GOP leaders to distance themselves from Republican presidential nominee Donald Trump's comments about the parents of a fallen U.S. soldier. Gov. Nikki Haley says the family "has standing to say whatever they want in the political process and should not face criticism for it." U.S. Sen. Lindsey Graham: Trump's comments "unacceptable."

BY BRISTOW MARCHANT

bmarchant@thestate.com

S.C. Democrats see an opportunity to go after the state's top Republicans in the controversy around GOP presidential nominee Donald Trump's comments about the family of a U.S. soldier who died fighting in Iraq.

State Rep. Todd Rutherford, minority leader in the S.C. House, called Monday on Gov. Nikki Haley and Lt. Gov. Henry McMaster to pull their support from Trump after his comments about the family of fallen Army Capt. Humayun Khan.

"Our state is a proud military state with thousands of active duty and retired soldiers," Rutherford said Monday. "Mr. Trump's attacks on our military, our soldiers, and the parents of those who made the ultimate sacrifice are reprehensible and un-American. Governor Haley and Lieutenant Governor McMaster should show true leadership and immediately withdraw their support."

Humayun Khan's father, Khizr Khan, denounced Trump at last week's Democratic convention for his call for a temporary shutdown of Muslims, like his family, entering the United States.

Trump tweeted Monday: "Mr. Khan, who does not know me, viciously attacked me from the stage of the DNC and is now all over T.V. doing the same."

In an interview Sunday, Trump also noted the Army captain's mother, Ghazala Khan, stood silently beside her husband at the convention podium. "She probably, maybe she wasn't allowed to have anything to say," Trump said.

Haley was one of several Republicans who pushed back against Trump's comments.

"As a member of a military family, and the governor of a proud military state that has been recognized as the most patriotic, my heart and my unending thanks go out to the Khan family for their enormous sacrifice for our country," Haley said in a statement. "As far as I'm concerned, they have the standing to say whatever they want in the political process and should not face criticism for it."

Haley has a long, strained relationship with Trump. In January, while delivering the GOP response to President Barack Obama's State of the Union speech, Haley took a swipe at Trump by calling on voters to resist the "siren call of the angriest voices."

McMaster, Trump's most high-profile S.C. supporter, did not immediately respond Monday to a request for comment.

Other Republicans also chided Trump, including U.S. Sen. Lindsey Graham, R-Seneca. "This is going to a place where we've never gone before, to push back against the families of the fallen," Graham said.

"There used to be some things that were sacred in American politics - that you don't do - like criticizing the parents of a fallen soldier even if they criticize you."

"If you're going to be leader of the free world, you have to be able to accept criticism. Mr. Trump can't," South Carolina's senior senator said. "The problem is, 'unacceptable' doesn't even begin to describe it."

Bristow Marchant:
 803-771-8405,
 @BristowatHome,
 @BuzzAtTheState

Title: S.C. Democrats hit Haley, McMaster on Trump's Gold Star family comments
Author: BY BRISTOW MARCHANT bmarchant@thestate.com
Size: 70.83 column inches
Rock Hill, SC Circulation: 34688

GERRY MELENDEZ gmelendez@thestate.com

Donald Trump was endorsed by state Lt. Gov. Henry McMaster, right, this year. Trump has been rebuked by several members of the Republican Party who were upset at his comments about the parents of a fallen U.S. soldier.

Title: 'Where we've never gone'
 Author: MEG KINNARD ASSOCIATED PRESS
 Size: 38.90 column inches
 Greenville, SC Circulation: 113473

'Where we've never gone'

Graham, others in
 GOP blast Trump

MEG KINNARD

ASSOCIATED PRESS

COLUMBIA - Donald Trump handily won South Carolina's Republican primary, and the state is solidly red, all but certain to go into his column in the general election.

But both of the state's U.S. senators, both Republicans, are criticizing the GOP presidential nominee's treatment of the parents of a decorated Muslim Army captain killed in Iraq, with one saying Trump is treacherously wading into an area previously untouched in politics: criticism of the families of fallen soldiers.

"This is going to a place where we've never gone before, to push back against the families of the fallen," U.S. Sen. Lindsey Graham told The Associated Press on Monday. "There used to be some things that were sacred in American politics - that you don't do — like criticizing the parents of a fallen soldier even if they criticize you."

For the past several days, Trump has been in a war of words with the parents of Capt. Humayun Khan, who was killed by a suicide bomber in 2004. At last week's Democratic National Convention, his father, Khizr Khan, criticized Trump's proposal to temporarily ban Muslims from entering the country.

Trump has responded by lashing out at Khan, implying that his wife, who stood beside him at the podium, didn't speak because, as a Muslim woman, she wasn't permitted to do so.

In the days since, the Khans have made the rounds on television, saying on CNN's "State of the Union" program Sunday that Trump "is a black soul" and calling on congressional GOP leaders to repudiate Trump's comments.

In statements released Sunday, Senate Majority Leader

Mitch McConnell and House Speaker Paul Ryan condemned any criticism of Muslim Americans who serve their country and rejected the idea of a Muslim travel ban — an idea proposed by Trump earlier in the campaign. But neither statement mentioned Trump by name or repudiated him.

"The problem is, 'unacceptable' doesn't even begin to describe it," Graham said further, of Trump's handling of the situation. The former presidential contender has said he'll support neither the billionaire businessman nor Hillary Clinton in November.

Tim Scott, South Carolina's junior senator, initially supported Marco Rubio's presidential bid, ultimately reluctantly saying he would support the party's eventual nominee. Contacted

See NEVER, Page 4A

Never

Continued from Page

3A

by AP on Monday, Scott said Gold Star families like the Khans "deserve our utmost respect and admiration."

Not mentioning Trump by name, Scott went on to seemingly characterize the entire kerfuffle as a distraction from the general election, on which he said Republicans needed to hone in, now.

"Heading into November, our party must have a laser focus on the issues that will defeat Hillary Clinton. Period," Scott said.

Rep. Mark Sanford said in a statement that Trump's "seemingly never ending parade of insults needs to stop, and the person to lead that effort will be Mr. Trump himself."

Sanford said while Trump's comments draw media attention that was useful to his candidacy when the field was crowded with 17 candidates, they don't win the independent voter who he says it essential in a two-way contest. He said the comments are impacting efforts to bring party faithful together.

"It is Mr. Trump who is making unification of the party difficult," Sanford said. "Each new altercation brings with it more concern from the voters I speak with on why unification around him is growing more and more difficult ..."

Gov. Nikki Haley said the Kahn family has standing "to say whatever they want in the political process and should not face criticism."